

WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT?

-----in Gacyle

Susan refuses to Act.-Vol. J. p. 189.

WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT?

By Pisistratus Caxton,

A NEW EDITION-IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

ROUTLEDGE, WARNE, & ROUTLEDGE, BROADWAY, LUDGATE HILL; NEW YORK: 129, GRAND STREET.

1864.

250. 5. 102

WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT? -000-

BOOK L-CHAPTER I.

In which the History opens with a description of the Social Manners, Habits, and Amusements of the English People, as exhibited in an immemorial National Festivity .- Characters to be commemorated in the History, introduced and graphically portrayed, with a nasological illustration. - Original suggestions as to the idiosyncrasies engendered by trades and callings, with other matters worthy of note, conveyed in artless dialogue after the manner of Herodotus. Father of History (Mother unknown).

prettiest villages in Surrey. The main street was lined with booths. abounding in toys, gleaming crockery, gay ribbons, and gilded gingerbread. Farther on, where the street widened into the ample village-green, rose the more pretending fabrics which lodged the attractive forms of the Mermaid, the Norfolk Giant, the Pig-faced Lady, the Spotted Boy, and the Calf with Two Heads: while high over even these edifices, and occupying the most conspicuous vantage-ground, a lofty stage promised to rural playgoers the "Grand Melodramatic Performance of The Remorseless Baron and the Bandit's Child." Music, lively if artless, resounded on every side; -drums, fifes, penny-whistles, cat-calls, and a handorgan played by a dark foreigner, from the height of whose shoulder a cynical but observant monkey eyed the hubbub and cracked his nuts.

It was now sunset-the throng at the fullest-an animated joyous scene. The day had been sultry; low on the western horizon, where lage, ranging from five-and-twenty to

It was a summer fair in one of the they stretched, in lengthened ridges of gold and purple, like the borderland between earth and sky. The tall elms on the green were still, save, near the great stage, one or two, upon which had climbed young urchins, whose laughing faces peered forth, here and there, from the foliage trembling under their restless movements.

Amidst the crowd, as it streamed saunteringly along, were two spectators - strangers to the place, as was notably proved by the attention they excited, and the broad jokes their dress and appearance provoked from the rustic wits,-jokes which they took with amused good-humour and sometimes retaliated with a zest which had already made them very popular personages; indeed, there was that about them which propitiated liking. They were young, and the freshness of enjoyment was so visible in their faces, that it begot a sympathy, and wherever they went, other faces brightened round them.

One of the two whom we have thus no clouds were to be seen, except individualised was of that enviable seven-and-twenty, in which, if a man | the boyish bloom of his face. He cannot contrive to make life very pleasant,-pitiable, indeed, must be the state of his digestive organs. But you might see by this gentleman's countenance that if there were many like him, it would be a worse world for the doctors. His cheek, though not highly coloured, was yet ruddy and clear; his hazel eyes were lively and keen; his hair, which escaped in loose clusters from a jean shooting-cap set jauntily on a wellshaped head, was of that deep sunny auburn rarely seen but in persons of vigorous and hardy temperament. He was good-looking on the whole, and would have deserved the more flattering epithet of handsome, but for his nose, which was what the French call "a nose in the air"not a nose supercilious, not a nose provocative, as such noses mostly are, but a nose decidedly in earnest to make the best of itself and of things in general—a nose that would push its way up in life, but so pleasantly that the most irritable fingers would never itch to lay hold of it. With such a nose a man might play the violoncello, marry for love, or even write poetry, and yet not go to the dogs. Never would he stick in the mud so long as he followed that nose in the air.

By the help of that nose this gentleman wore a black velveteen jacket of foreign cut: a mustache and imperial (then much rarer in England than they have been since the Siege of Sebastopol); and yet left you perfectly convinced that he was an honest Englishman, who had not only no designs on your pocket, but would not be easily duped by any designs upon his own.

The companion of the personage thus sketched might be somewhere about seventeen : but his gait. his air, his lithe vigorous frame, struck the eye much more than his elder comrade. Not that he was regularly handsome-far from it: yet it is no paradox to say that he was beautiful-at least, few indeed were the women who would not have called him so. His hair, long like his friend's, was of a dark chestnut, with gold gleaming through it where the sun fell, inclining to curl, and singularly soft and silken in its texture. His large, clear, dark-blue. happy eyes were fringed with long ebon lashes, and set under brows which already wore the expression of intellectual power, and, better still, of frank courage and open loyalty. His complexion was fair, and somewhat pale, and his lips in laughing showed teeth exquisitely white and even. But though his profile was clearly cut, it was far from the Greek ideal; and he wanted the height of stature which is usually considered essential to the personal pretensions of the male sex. Without being positively short, he was still under middle height, and from the compact development of his proportions, seemedal ready to have attained his full growth. His dress though not foreign, like his comrade's, was peculiar:-- a broad-brimmed strawhat, with a wide blue ribbon; shirtcollar turned down, leaving the throat bare: a dark-green jacket of thinner material than cloth; white trousers and waistcoat completed his costume. He looked like a mother's darling-perhaps he was one.

Scratch across his back went one of those ingenious mechanical contrivances familiarly in vogue at fairs, which are designed to impress upon the victim to whom they are applied, the pleasing conviction that his garment is rent in twain. The boy turned round so quickly that he caught the arm of the ofshowed a manliness at variance with fender-a pretty village-girl, a year "Found in the act, sentenced, leathern apron, who was regarding punished," cried he, snatching a with saturnine interest the motley kiss, and receiving a gentle slap. "And now, good for evil, here's a ribbon for you-choose."

The girl slunk back shyly, but her companions pushed her forward, and she ended by selecting a cherrycoloured ribbon, for which the boy paid carelessly, while his elder and wiser friend looked at him with grave compassionate rebuke, and grumbled out,-"Dr. Franklin tells us that once in his life he paid too dear for a whistle; but then he was only seven years old, and a whistle has its uses. But to pay such a price for a scratchback !-- Prodigal! Come along."

As the friends strolled on, naturally enough all the young girls who wished for ribbons, and were possessed of scratchbacks, followed in their wake. Scratch went the instruments, but in vain.

"Lasses," said the elder, turning sharply upon them his nose in the air, "ribbons are plentiful-shillings scarce; and kisses, though pleasant in private, are insipid in public. What, still! Beware! know that, innocent as we seem, we are womeneaters: and if you follow us farther. you are devoured!" So saying, he expanded his jaws to a width so preternaturally large, and exhibited a row of grinders so formidable, that the girls fell back in consternation. The friends turned down a narrow alley between the booths, and though still pursued by some adventurous and mercenary spirits, were comparatively undisturbed as they threaded their way along the back of the booths, and arrived at last on the village-green, and in front of the Great Stage.

friend: "Thespian and classical- the left: it is the gesture of a man or two younger than himself. | turning to a grave cobbler in figures ranged in front of the curtain as the "Dramatis Persona," he said. "You seem attracted, sir; you have probably already witnessed the performance."

"Yes." returned the Cobbler : "this is the third day, and to morrow's the last. I arn't missed once yet, and I shan't miss; but it arn't what it was awhile back."

"That is sad; but then the same thing is said of everything by everybody who has reached your respectable age, friend, Summers, and suns, stupid old watering-places, and pretty young women, 'arn't what they were awhile back.' If men and things go on degenerating in this way, our grandchildren will have a dull time of it." The Cobbler eyed the young man, and nodded approvingly. He had sense enough to comprehend the ironical philosophy of the replyand our Cobbler loved talk out of the common way. "You speaks truly and cleverly, sir. But if old folks do always say that things are worse than they were, ben't there always summat in what is always said? I'm for the old times; my neighbour, Joe Spruce, is for the new, and says we are all a-progressing. But he's a pink-I'm a blue." "You are a blue!" said the boy Lionel-" I don't understand."

"Young 'un, I'm a Tory-that's blue: and Spruce is a Rad-that's pink! And, what is more to the purpose, he is a tailor, and I'm a cobbler."

"Aha!" said the elder, with much interest: "more to the purpose is it? How so?"

The Cobbler put the forefinger of "Oho, Lionel!" quoth the elder the right hand on the foreinger of worth seeing, no doubt." Then about to ratiocinate or demonstrate -as Quintilian, in his remarks on the oratory of fingers, probably observes; or if he has failed to do the crowd towards the theatre: so, it is a blot in his essay.

"You see, sir," quoth the Cobbler, "that a man's husiness has a deal to do with his manner of thinking. Every trade, I take it, has ideas as belong to it. Butchers don't see life as hakers do; and if you talk to a dozen tallow-chandlers, then to a dozen blacksmiths, you will see tallow-chandlers are peculir, and blacksmiths too."

"You are a keen observer." said he of the jean cap, admiringly; "your remark is new to me; I dare-say it is true."

"Course it is; and the stars have summat to do with it; for if they order a man's calling, it stands to reason that they order a man's mind to fit it. Now, a tailor sits on his board with others, and is always a-talking with 'em, and a-reading the news; therefore he thinks, as his fellows do, smart and sharp, bang up to the day, but nothing 'riginal and all his own, like. But a cobbler," continued the man of leather, with a majestic air, "sits by hisself, and talks with hisself: and what he thinks gets into his head without being put there by another man's tongue.

"You enlighten me more and more," said our friend with the nose in the air, bowing respectfully-"a tailor is gregarious, a cohhler solitary. The gregarious go with the future. the solitary stick by the past. I nnderstand why you are a Tory, and perhaps a poet.'

" Well, a bit of one," said the Cobbler, with an iron smile. "And many's the Cohbler who is a poetor discovers marbellous things in heard speak of Waife?" a crystal-whereas a tailor, sir" (spoken with great contempt). "only sees the upper leather of the world's sole in a newspaper."

Here the conversation was interrupted hy a sudden pressure of the two young friends looked up. and saw that the new object of attraction was a little girl, who seemed scarcely ten years old, though, in truth, she was about two years older. She had just emerged from behind the curtain, made her obeisance to the crowd, and was now walking in front of the stage with the prettiest possible air of infantine solemnity.

"Poor little thing!" said Lionel. " Poor little thing!" said the Cobbler. And had you been there, my reader, ten to one but you would have said the same. And yet she was attired in white satin, with spangled flounce and a tinsel jacket: and she wore a wreath of flowers (to be sure, the flowers were not real) on her long fair curls, with gaudy bracelets (to be sure, the stones were mock) on her slender arms. Still there was something in her that all this finery could not vulgarise; and since it could not vulgarise, you pitied her for it. She had one of those charming faces that look straight into the hearts of us all, young and old. And though she seemed quite self-possessed, there was no effrontery in her air, but the ease of a little lady, with a simple child's unconsciousness that there was anything in her situation to induce you to sigh,

" Poor thing."

"You should see her act, young gents," said the Cobbler-"she plays uncommon. But if you had seen him as taught her-seen him a year ago."

"Who's he?" "Waife, sir; mayhap you have

"I hlush to say, no." "Why, he might have made his fortune at Common Garden; but that's a long story. Poor fellow! he's broke down now, anyhow. But | man! But they ill-uses him; and she takes care of him, little darling if it warn't for her, he'd starve. He -God bless thee!" and the Cobbler fed them all once; he can feed them here exchanged a smile and a nod no longer-he'd starve. That's the with the little girl, whose face world; they use up a genus, and brightened when she saw him when it falls on the road, push on; amidst the crowd.

Raffaelle!" cried the elder of the they're a-going to act; won't you young men, "before I am many look in, gents?" hours older I must have that child's head!"

Cobbler, aghast,

"In my sketch-book. You are little girl?"

father - that's Waife - marbellous cherub.

that's what Joe Spruce calls a-pro-"By the brush and pallet of gressing. But there's the drum!

"Of course," cried Lionel-"of course. And, hark ye, Vance, we'll "Her head, man!" cried the toss up which shall be the first to take that little girl's head."

"Murderer in either sense of the a poet-I a painter. You know the word!" said Vance, with a smile that would have become Correggio "Don't I! She and her grand- if a tyro had offered to toss up father lodge with me-her grand- which should be the first to paint a

CHAPTER II.

The Historian takes a view of the British Stage as represented by the Irregular Drama, the Regular having fere the date of the events to which this narrative is restricted) disappeared from the Vestiges of Creation.

effective in the theatrical. Nobody

THEY entered the little theatre, yawned; you did not even hear a and the Cobbler with them; but the cough, nor the cry of that omnilast retired modestly to the three- present baby, who is always sure to penny row. The young gentlemen set up an unappeasable wail in the were favoured with reserved seats, midmost interest of a classical five-price one shilling. "Very dear," act piece, represented for the first murmured Vance, as he carefully time on the metropolitan boards. buttoned the pocket to which he Here the story rushed on, per fas restored a purse woven from links aut nefas, and the audience went of steel, after the fashion of chain with it. Certes, some man who mail. Ah, Messieurs and Confrères, understood the stage must have put the Dramatic Authors, do not flatter the incidents together, and then left yourselves that we are about to give it to each illiterate histrio to find you a complacent triumph over the the words-words, my dear confrères. Grand Melodrame of "The Re- signify so little in an acting play. morseless Baron and the Bandit's The movement is the thing. Grand Child." We grant it was horrible secret! Analyse, practise it, and rubbish, regarded in an aesthetic restore to grateful stars that lost point of view, but it was mightily Pleiad the British Acting Drama.

Of course the Bandit was an ill-

had some mysterious rights to the private chamber while that tyrant Estate and Castle of the Remorse- was tossing restless on the couch, less Baron. That titled usurper, over which hung his terrible sword. therefore, did all in his power to abstracted from his coffer the deeds hunt the Bandit out in his fastnesses, and bring him to a bloody end. Here the interest centred itself in the Bandit's child, who, we need not say, was the little girl in his sword, with what glee she apthe wreath and spangles, styled in the play-bill "Miss Juliet Araminta Waife," and the incidents consisted in her various devices to foil the pursuit of the Baron and save her father. Some of these incidents were indebted to the Comio Muse, and kept the audience in a broad laugh. Her arch playfulness here was exquisite. With what vivacity she duped the High Sheriff, who had the commands of his king to take the Bandit alive or dead, into the belief that the very Lawyer employed by the Baron was the criminal in disguise, and what pearly teeth she showed when the Lawyer was seized and gagged; how dexterously she ascertained the weak point in the character of the "King's Lieutenant" (jeune premier), who was deputed by his royal master to aid the Remorseless Baron in trouncing the Bandit; how cunningly she learned that he was in love with the Baron's ward (jeune ing of him-his wrongs, virtues, amoureuse), whom that unworthy noble intended to force into a marriage with himself on account of her | immortal narrative, was more quoted fortune; how prettily she passed and more mythical. But in the notes to and fro, the Lieutenant last sceno there was the Bandit, never suspecting that she was the there in his cavern, helpless with Bandit's child, and at last got the bruises and wounds, lying on a rock. king's soldier on her side, as the In rushed the enemies, Baron, High event proved. And oh how gaily, Sheriff, and all, to seize him. Not and with what mimio art, she stole a word spoke the Bandit, but his into the Baron's castle, disguised as attitude was sublime-even Vance revelations and predictions, fright- seized, halter round his neck, and ened all the vassals with blue lights about to be hanged, down from the used and most estimable man. He turing even into the usurper's own that proved the better rights of the persecuted Bandit. Then, when he woke before she could escape with her treasure, and pursued her with parently set herself on fire, and skipped out of the casement in an explosion of crackers. And when the drama approached its dénouement, when the Baron's men, and the royal officers of justice, had, despite all her arts, tracked the Bandit to the cave, in which, after various retreats, he lay hidden, wounded by shots, and bruised by a fall from a precipice,-with what admirable by-play she hovered around the spot, with what pathos she sought to decoy away the pursuers -it was the skylark playing round the nest. And when all was vainwhen, no longer to be deceived, the enemies sought to seize her, how mockingly she eluded them, bounded up the rock, and shook her slight finger at them in scorn. Surely she will save that estimable Bandit still! Now, hitherto, though the Bandit was the nominal hero of the piece, though you were always hearhairbreadth escapes-he had never been seen. Not Mrs. Harris, in the a witch, startled his conscience with cried "bravo;" and just as he is and chemical illusions, and ven- chasm above leans his child, holding the title-deeds, filched from the "Waife, Waife!" cried many a Baron, and by her side the King's village voice, as the little girl led Lieutenant, who proclaims the him to the front of the stage. He Bandit's pardon, with due restora- hobbled; there was a bandage round tion to his honours and estates, and his eyes. The plot, in describing consigns, to the astounded Sheriff, the accident that had befallen the the august person of the Remorse- Bandit, idealised the genuine inless Baron. Then the affecting firmities of the man-infirmities scene, father and child in each other's that had befallen him since last seen arms; and then an exclamation, in that village. He was blind of which had been long hovering about one eye; he had become crippled; the lips of many of the audience, some malady of the traches or larynx broke out, "Waife, Waife!" Yes, had seemingly broken up the once the Bandit, who appeared but in joyous key of the old pleasant voice. the last scene, and even then uttered He did not trust himself to speak, not a word, was the once great even on that stage, but silently bent actor on that itinerant Thespian stage, known through many a fair Vance, who was an habitual playfor his exuberant humour, his im- goer, saw in that simple salutation promptu jokes, his arch eye, his that the man was an artistic actor. redundant life of drollery, and the All was over, the audience streamed strange pathos or dignity with which out, much affected, and talking one he could suddenly exalt a jester's to the other. It had not been at all part, and call forth tears in the like the ordinary stage-exhibitions startled hush of laughter; he whom at a village fair. Vance and Lionel the Cobbler had rightly said, "might exchanged looks of surprise, and have made a fortune at Covent then, by a common impulse, moved Garden." There was the remnant towards the stage, pushed aside the of the old popular mime !- all his curtain, which had fallen, and were attributes of eloquence reduced to in that strange world which has so dumb show! Masterly touch of many reduplications, fragments of nature and of art in this representa- one broken mirror, whether in the tion of him-touch which all, who proudest theatre, or the lowliest had ever in former years seen and barn-nay, whether in the palace heard him on that stage, felt simul- of kings, the cabinet of statesmen, taneously. He came in for his per- the home of domestic life-the world sonal portion of dramatic tears, we call "Behind the Scenes."

his head to the rustic audience; and

CHAPTER III.

Striking illustrations of lawless tyranny and infant avarice exemplified in the social conditions of Great Britain. Superstitions of the Dark Ages still in force amongst the Trading Community, furnishing valuable hints to certain American journalists, and highly suggestive of reflections humilisting to the national vanity.

THE Remorseless Baron, who was my property. Call and speak to me no other than the managerial pro- about it to-morrow, before the first prietor of the stage, was leaning performance begins, which is twelve against a side-scene, with a pot of o'clock. Happy to see any of your porter in his hand. The King's Lieutenant might be seen on the background, toasting a piece of cheese on the point of his loval sword. The Bandit had crept into a corner, and the little girl was clinging to him fondly as his hand was stroking her fair hair. Vance looked round, and approached the Bandit-"Sir, allow me to congratulate you; your bow was admirable. I have never seen John Kemble-before my time: but l I shall fancy I have seen him nowseen him on the night of his retirement from the stage. As to your grandchild, Miss Juliet Araminta, she is a perfect chrysolite."

Before Mr. Waife could reply, the Remorseless Baron stepped up in a spirit worthy of his odious and arbitrary character. "What do you do here, sir? I allow no conspirators behind the scenes earwigging my people."

"I beg pardon respectfully: I am an artist-a pupil of the Royal Academy; I should like to make a sketch of Miss Juliet Araminta."

"Sketch! nonsense."

"Sir." said Lionel, with the seasonable extravagance of early youth. "my friend would, I am sure, pay for the sitting-handsomely!"

"Ha!" said the manager, softened, friends in the reserved seats. Busy now, and-and-in short-excuse me-servant, sir-servant, sir."

The Baron's manner left no room for further parley. Vance bowed. smiled, and retreated. But meanwhile his young friend had seized the opportunity to speak both to Waife and his grandchild; and when Vance took his arm and drew him away, there was a puzzled musing expression on Lionel's face, and he remained silent till they had got through the press of such stragglers as still loitered before the stage, and were in a quiet corner of the sward. Stars and moon were then up-a lovely summer night.

" What on earth are you thinking of, Lionel? I have put to you three questions, and you have not answered one."

"Vance," answered Lionel, slowly, "the oddest thing! I am so disanpointed in that little girl-greedy and mercenary!"

"Precocious villain! how do you know that she is greedy and mercenary?"

"Listen: when that surly old manager came up to you, I said something - civil, of course - to Waife, who answered in a hoarse broken voice, but in very good lan-"you speak like a gentleman, sir; guage. Well, when I told the mabut, sir, Miss Juliet Araminta is nager that you would pay for the under my protection-in fact, she is sitting, the child caught hold of my arm hastily, pulled me down to her bound in calf, for three pounds: I own height, and whispered, 'How could buy a dress coat for three much will he give?' Confused by a question so point-blank, I answered at random, 'I don't know; ten shillings perhaps.' You should have seen her face!"

"See her face! radiant-I should think so. Too much by half!" exclaimed Vance. "Ten shillings!

Spendthrift!"

"Too much-she looked as you might look if one offered you ten shillings for your picture of 'Julius Cæsar considering whether he should cross the Rubicon.' But when the manager had declared her to be his property, and appointed you to call to-morrow-implying that he was to be paid for allowing her to sit-her countenance became overcast, and she muttered sullenly, 'I'll not sit -I'll not!' Then she turned to her grandfather, and something very quick and close was whispered between the two; and she pulled me by the sleeve, and said in my earoh, but so eagerly !- 'I want three pounds, sir,-three pounds !-- if he would give three pounds: - And come to our lodgings-Mr. Merle. Three pounds -Willow Lane. three!" And with those words hissing in my ear, and coming from that fairy mouth, which ought to drop pearls and diamonds, I left her," added Lionel, as gravely as if he were sixty, "and lost an illusion!"

"Three pounds!" cried Vance, raising his eyebrows to the highest arch of astonishment, and lifting his nose in the air towards the majestic moon,-three pounds !- a fabulous sum! Who has three pounds to throw away? Dukes, with a hundred thousand a-year in acres, have not three pounds to draw out of their pockets in that reckless profligate manner. Three pounds ! - what could I not buy for three pounds! three pounds," grumbled Vance, pounds (silk lining not included): I could be lodged for a month for three pounds! And a jade in tinsel. just entering on her teens, to ask three pounds for what? for becoming immortal on the canvass of Francis Vance?—bother!" Here Vance felt a touch on his shoulder. He turned round quickly, as a man out of temper does under similar circumstances, and beheld the swart face of the Cobbler.

"Well, master, did not she act fine?

-how d've like her?"

"Not much in her natural oharacter; but she sets a mighty high value on herself."

"Anan, I don't take you."

"She'll not catch me taking her ! Three pounds !- three kingdoms !" "Stay," cried Lionel to the Cobbler; "did not you say she lodged with you? Are you Mr. Merle?"

"Merle's my name, and she do lodge with me-Willow Lane."

"Come this way, then, a few yards down the road-more quiet. Tell me what the child means, if you can?" and Lionel related the offer of his friend, the reply of the manager, and the grasping avarice of Miss Juliet Araminta.

The Cobbler made no answer; and when the young friends, surprised at his silence, turned to look at him, they saw he was wiping his eyes with his sleeve.

"Poor little thing!" he said at last, and still more pathetically than he had uttered the same words at her appearance in front of the stage : "'tis all for her grandfather : I guess -I guess."

"Oh," cried Lionel, joyfully, "I am so glad to think that. It alters the whole case, you see, Vance."

"It don't alter the case of the I could buy the Dramatio Library, "What's her grandfather to me, that I should give his grandchild sich droll jests, and looked so three pounds, when any other child in the village would have leapt out of her skin to have her face upon my sketch-book and five shillings in her pocket? Hang her grandfather ! "

They were now in the main road. The Cobbler seated himself on a lonely milestone, and looked first at one of the faces before him, then at the other; that of Lionel seemed to attract him the most, and in speaking it was Lionel whom he addressed.

"Young master," he said, "it is now just four years ago, when Mr. Rugge, coming here, as he and his troop had done at fair-time ever sin' I can mind of, brought with him the man you have seen to-night, William Waife; I calls him Gentleman Waife. How ever that man fell into sich straits-how he came to join sich a carawan, would puzzle most heads. It puzzles Joe Spruce, uncommon: it don't puzzle me."

"Why?" asked Vance. "Cos of Saturn!"

"Satan?"

"Saturn-dead agin his Second and Tenth House, I'll swear. Lord of Ascendant, mayhap; -- in combustion of the Sun-who knows?"

"You're not an astrologer?" said Vance, suspiciously, edging off,

"Bit of it-no offence."

"What does it signify?" said Lionel, impatiently: "go on. So you called Mr. Waife 'Gentleman Waife; and if you had not been an astrologer you would have been nuzzled to see him in such a calling."

"Ay, that's it : for he warn't like any as we ever see on these boards hereabouts; and yet he warn't exfor the spree of the thing. He had and got summat bad on his chest always what I calls a gentlemanjust as if one o've two were doing a bit of sport to please your friends, Well, he drew hugely, and so he did, every time he came, so that the great families in the neighbourhood would go to hear him; and he lodged in my house, and had pleasant ways with him, and was what I call a scollard. But still I don't want to deceive ye, and I should judge him to have been a wild dog in his day. Mercury ill-aspectednot a doubt of it. Last year it so happened that one of the great gents who belong to a Lunnon theatre was here at fair-time. Whether he had heard of Waife chanceways, and come express to judge for hisself, I can't say; like eno'. And when he had seen Gentleman Waife act, he sent for him to the inn-Red Lion-and offered him a power o' money to go to Lunnon-Common Garden. Well, sir, Waife did not take to it all at once, but hemmed and hawed, and was at last quite coaxed into it; and so he went. But bad luck came on it:

comical, yet not commonlike, but

and I knew there would, for I saw it all in my crystal." "Oh." exclaimed Vance, "a crystal, too; really it is getting late, and if you had your crystal about you, you might see that we want to sup.

"What happened?" asked Lionel, more blandly, for he saw the Cobbler, who had meant to make a great effect by the introduction of the crystal, was offended.

"What happened? why, just what I foreseed. There was an accident in the railway 'tween this and Lunnon, and poor Waife lost an eye, and was a cripple for life-so he actly like a Lunnon actor, as I have could not go on the Lunnon stage seen 'em in Lunnon, either, but at all; and what was worse, he was more like a clever fellow who acted a long time atwist life and death, wi' catching cold, and lost his voice, and that's why little Sophy wants and became the sad object you have the three pounds." gazed on, young happy things that ye are."

"But he got some compensation from the railway, I suppose?" said Vance, with the unfeeling egua-nimity of a stoical demon.

"He did, and spent it. I suppose the gentleman broke out in him as here-that if he could get three soon as he had money, and ill though pounds, he had hit on a plan to be he was, the money went. Then it independent like.' I tell you what seems he had no help for it but to try and get back to Mr. Rugge. But Mr. Rugge was sore and spiteful at his leaving; for Rugge counted such a wreck. But he was forced on him, and had even thought of to give in; and so he contrived to taking the huge theatre at York, and bringing out Gentleman Waife hisself at the last without speakas his trump card. But it warn't fated, and Rugge thought himself ill-used, and so at first he would have nothing more to say to Waife. And truth is, what could the poor man do for Rugge? But then Waife produces little Sophy." "You mean Juliet Araminta?"

said Vance.

"Same-in private life she be like." Sophy. And Waife taught her to act, and put together the plays for her. And Rugge caught at her; and sho supports Waife with what she gets: for Rugge only gives him four shillings a-week, and that goes on 'baccy and suchlike."

"Suchlike-drink, I presume!"

said Vance.

"No-he don't drink. But he do smoke: and he has little genteel ways with him, and four shillings still seated on the milestone, gazing goes on 'em. And they have been about the country this spring, and | walked hriskly down the road, done well, and now they be here. But Rugge behaves shocking hard now," said Lionel, in his softest tone. to hoth on 'em: and I don't believe He was bent on coaxing three he has any right to her in law, as pounds out of his richer friend, and he pretends-only a sort of under- that might require some managestanding which she and her grand- ment. father could hreak if they pleased; youngsters in Mr. Vance's profesand that's what they wish to do, sion, there ran many a joko at the

"How?" cried Lionel, eagerly. "If they had three pounds could they get away? and if they did, how could they live? Where could they go?"

"That's their secret. But I heard Waife say-the first night they came put his back up; it was Rugge insisting on his coming on the stage agin, for he did not like to he seen cut up that play-story, and appear ing,"

"My good friend," cried young Lionel, "we are greatly obliged to you for your story-and we should much like to see little Sophy and her grandfather at your house tomorrow-can we?"

"Certain sure you can - after the play's over; to-night, if you

"No, to-morrow; you see my friend is impatient to get back now -we will call to-morrow."

"'Tis the last day of their stay," said the Cohbler. "But you can't be sure to see them safely at my house afore ten o'clock at nightand not a word to Rugge! mum!" "Not a word to Rugge," returned Lionel; "good-night to you."

The young men left the Cohhler on the stars, and ruminating. They

"It is I who have had the talk For amongst the wild skill with which he parried irregular assaults on his purse; and that have supped. I have the hunger of gentleman, with his nose more than usually in the air, having once observed to such scoffers "that they were quite welcome to any joke at few yards down a green lane, and his expense "-a wag had exclaimed. "At your expense! Don't fear; if a joke were worth a farthing, you would never give that permission."

So when Lionel made that innocent remark, the softness of his tone warned the artist of some snake in the grass-and he prudently remained silent. Lionel, in a voice still sweeter, repeated,-" It is I who have all the talk now!"

"Naturally," then returned Vance, " naturally you have, for it is you, I suspect, who alone have the intention to pay for it, and three pounds appear to be the price. Dearish, ch?"

pounds!"

"Tush! and say no more till we a wolf."

Just in sight of the next milestone the young travellers turned a reached a small inn on the banks of the Thames. Here they had sojourned for the last few days, sketching, boating, roaming about the country from sunrise, and returning to supper and bed at nightfall. It was the pleasantest little inn-an arbour, covered with honeysuckle, between the porch and the river-a couple of pleasure-boats moored to the bank; and now all the waves rippling under moonlight.

"Supper and lights in the arbour," cried Vance to the waiting-maid-"hey, presto-quick! while we turn in to wash our hands. And harkye, "Ah, Vance, if I had three a quart jug of that capital whiskytoddy."

CHAPTER IV.

Being a chapter that links the Past to the Future by the gradual elucidation of Antecedents.

rambles! O summer nights, under honeysuckle arbours, on the banks of starry waves! O Youth, Youth!

Vance ladled out the toddy and lighted his cigar, then leaning his head on his hand, and his elbow on the table, he looked with an artist's eye along the glancing river.

"After all," said he, "I am glad I am a painter; and I hope I may live to be a great one."

can only just paint well enough to side of the profession; there is a O WAYSIDE inns and pedestrian please myself, find that it gives a new charm to nature-" "Cut sentiment," quoth Vance,

"and go on."

"What," continued Lionel, unchilled by the admonitory interruption, "must you feel who can fix a fading sunshine—a fleeting face on a scrap of canvass, and say, Sunshine and Beauty, live there for ever!"" VANCE.—" For ever! no! "No doubt, if you live, you will lours perish, canvass rots. be a great one," cried Lionel, with remains to us of Zeuxis? Still it is cordial sincerity. "And if I, who prettily said on behalf of the poetic I am glad to be a painter. But you share of the costs! Ah, there are must not catch the fever of my energy and spirit and life in all that. calling. Your poor mother would Lionel, which will found upon rock never forgive me if she thought I had made you a dauber by my example."

LIONEL (gloomily) .- "No. I shall not be a painter! But what can I be? How shall I ever build on the that it took Lionel by surprise, and earth one of the castles I have built in the air? Fame looks so far-Fortune so impossible. But one thing I am bent upon" (speaking with knit brow and clenched teeth) -"I will gain an independence somehow, and support my mother."

VANCE .- "Your mother is supported-she has the pension-" LIONEL .- " Of a captain's widow:

and" (he added with a flushed cheek) "a first floor that she lets to lodgers." VANCE .- "No shame in that! Peers let houses; and on the Continent, princes let not only first floors, but fifth and sixth floors, to say nothing of attics and cellars. In beginning the world, friend Lionel, if you don't wish to get chafed at every turn, fold up your pride carefully, put it under lock and key, and only let it out to air upon grand occasions. Pride is a garment all stiff brocade outside, all grating sackcloth on the side next to the skin. Even kings don't wear the dalmaticum except at a coronation. Independence you desire; good. But are you dependent now? Your mother has given you an excellent the sting. On leaving school last education, and you have already put it to profit. My dear boy," added Vance, with unusual warmth, "I obligations to this benefactor, and honour you; at your age, on leaving informed me that he wished to know school, to have shut yourself up, my own choice as to a professiontranslated Greek and Latin per that if I preferred Church or Bar, sheet for a bookseller, at less than he would maintain me at College." a valet's wages, and all for the purpose of buying comforts for your the sting in that? Help yourself mother; and having a few pounds to toddy, my boy, and take more in your own pockets, to rove your genial views of life."

prosaio one-we'll blink it. Yes; little holiday with me, and pay your some castle as fine as any you have built in air. Your hand, my boy,"

This burst was so unlike the practical dryness, or even the more unctuous humour, of Frank Vance. his voice faltered as he pressed the hand held out to him. He answered. "I don't deserve your praise, Vance, and I fear the pride you tell me to put under lock and key, has the larger share of the merit you ascribe to better motives. Independent? No! I have never been so."

VANCE .- "Well, you depend on a parent,-who, at seventeen, does not?"

LIONEL .- "I did not mean my mother; of course, I could not be too proud to take benefits from her. But the truth is simply this: my father had a relation, not very near. indeed-a consin, at about as distant a remove, I fancy, as a cousin well can be. To this gentleman my mother wrote when my poor father died-and he was generous, for it is he who paid for my schooling. I did not know this till very lately. I had a vague impression, indeed, that I had a powerful and wealthy kinsman who took interest in me. but whom I had never seen."

VANCE,-" Never seen ?"

LIONEL.-" No. And here comes Christmas, my mother, for the first time, told me the extent of my

VANCE .- "Body o' mc! where's me out. I then asked to see my benefactor's letters; and my mother, unconscious of the pain she was about to inflict, showed me not only the last one, but all she had received from him. Oh, Vance, they were terrible those letters! The first began by a dry acquiescence in the claims of kindred-a curt proposal to pay my schooling, but not one word of kindness, and a stern proviso that the writer was never to see nor hear from me. He wanted no gratitude-ho disbelieved in all professions of it. His favours would cease if I molested him. 'Molested' was the word; it was bread thrown to a dog."

VANCE .- " Tut ! Only a rich man's eccentricity. A bachelor, I presume?"

LIONEL.-"My mother says he has been married, and is a widower. VANCE .- " Any children?"

LIONEL .- " My mother says none living; but I know little or nothing about his family."

Vance looked with keen scrutiny into the face of his boy-friend, and, after a pause, said, drily-" Plain as a pikestaff. Your relation is one of those men who, having no children, suspect and dread the attention of an heir presumptive; and what has made this sting as you call it, keener to you, is-pardon me-is in some silly words of your mother, who, in showing you the letters, has hinted to you that that heir you might be, if you were sufficiently pliant and subservient. Am I not right?"

Lionel hung his head, without reply.

VANCE (cheeringly) .- "So, so; no great harm as yet. Enough of the first letter. What was the last?" LIONEL .- "Still more offensive. He, this kinsman, this patron, desired my mother to spare him those references to her son's ability and ing still, for in it he said, that if, in

LIONEL .- "You have not heard promise, which, though natural to herself, had slight interest to himhim, the condescending benefactor ! -As to his opinion, what could I care for the opinion of one I had never seen? All that could sensibly affect my-oh, but I cannot go on with those cutting phrases, which imply but this, 'All I can care for is the money of a man who insults me while he gives it."

> VANCE (emphatically) .- " Without being a wizard. I should say your relative was rather a disagreeable person-not what is called urbane and amiable - in fact, a brute."

LIONEL,-" You will not blame me, then, when I tell you that I resolved not to accept the offer to maintain me at college, with which the letter closed. Luckily Dr. Wallis (the head master of my school), who had always been very kind to me, had just undertaken to supervise a popular translation of the classics. He recommended me, at my request, to the publisher engaged in the undertaking, as not incapable of translating some of the less difficult Latin authors-subject to his corrections. When I had finished the first instalment of the work thus intrusted to me, my mother grew alarmed for my health, and insisted on my taking some recreation. You were about to set out on a pedestrian tour. I had, as you say, some pounds in my pocket; and thus I have passed with you the merriest days of my life." VANCE .- " What said your civil cousin when your refusal to go to college was conveyed to him?"

LIONEL,-" He did not answer my mother's communication to that effect till just before I left home, and then-no, it was not his last letter from which I repeated that withoring extract-no, the last was more gallspite of the ability and promise that | that ineffectual, fairly rose, wound had been so vaunted, the dulness of his arm brother-like round him, and a college and the labour of learned professions were so distasteful to me. he had no desire to dictate to my choice, but that as he did not wish one who was, however remotely, of his blood, and bore the name of Haughton, to turn shoehlack or pickpocket-Vance-Vance!"

VANCE.-" Lock up your pridethe sackcloth frets you-and go on; and that therefore he-"

LIONEL .- "Would huy me a commission in the army, or get me an appointment in India."

VANCE .- "Which did you take?" LIONEL (passionately), - "Which! so offered-which?-of course neither! But distrusting the tone of my mother's reply, I sate down, the evening before I left home, and wrote myself to this cruel man. I did not show my letter to my mother -did not tell her of it. I wrote shortly-that if he would not accept my gratitude, I would not accept his benefits; that shoeblack I might be -pickpocket, no! that he need not fear I should disgrace his blood or my name ; and that I would not rest stream, calm with starlight, flowing till, sooner or later, I had paid him back all that I had cost him, and felt relieved from the hurthens of an ohligation which-which-" The boy paused, covered his face with his hands, and sohbed.

tended to soold his friend, but finding dew still glistened in his eyes.

drew him from the arbour to the shelving margin of the river. "Comfort," then said the Artist, almost solemnly, as here, from the inner depths of his character the true genius of the man came forth and spoke-" Comfort, and look round; see where the islet interrupts the tide, and how smilingly the stream flows on. See, just where we stand, how the slight pebbles are fretting the wave-would the wave, if not fretted, make that pleasant music? A few miles farther on, and the river is spanned by a bridge, which busy feet now are crossing; by the side of that bridge now is rising a palace;all the men who rule England have room in that palace. At the rear of the palace soars up the old Ahbey where kings have their tombs in right of the names they inherit: men, lowly as we, have found tombs there, in right of the names which they made. Think, now, that you stand on that hridge with a boy's lofty hope, with a man's steadfast courage; then turn again to that on towards the bridge-spite of islet and pehbles,"

Lionel made no audible answer, though his lips murmured, hut he pressed closer and closer to his friend's side; and the tears were already Vance, though much moved, pre- dried on his cheek-though their

CHAPTER V.

Speculations on the moral qualities of the Bandit,-Mr. Vance, with mingled emotions, foresees that the acquisition of the Bandit's acquaintance may be attended with pecuniary loss.

VANCE loosened the boat from its moorings, stepped in, and took up all, that he should want to extract the cars. Lionel followed, and sate from our pockets three pounds—the by the stern. The Artist rowed on Bandit! No, Lionel. I tell you what slowly, whistling melodiously in time to the dash of the oars. They soon came to the bank of garden-ground surrounding with turf, on which fairies might have danced, one of those villas never seen out of England. From the windows of the villa the lights gleamed steadily; over the hanks, dipping into the water, hung large willows breathlessly; the hoat gently brushed aside their pendant boughs, and Vance rested in a grassy cove.

"And faith," said the Artist, gaily -"Faith," said he, lighting his third cigar, "it is time we should bestow a few words more on the Remorseless Baron and the Bandit's Child! What a cock-and-a-bull story the Cobbler told us! He must have thought us precious green." LIONEL (roused). - " Nay, I see nothing so wonderful in the story. though much that is sad. You must allow that Waife may have been a good actor-you became quite excited merely at his attitude and bow. Natural, therefore, that he should have been invited to try his chance on the London stage-not improbable that he may have met with an accident by the train, and so lost his chance for ever-natural, then, that he should press into service his poor little grandchild-natural, also, that, hardly treated, and his pride hurt, he should wish to escape."

VANCE .- "And more natural than is not probable, that he should have disposed of that olever child to a vagabond like Rugge-she plays admirably. The manager who was to have engaged him would have engaged her if he had seen her. I am puzzled."

LIONEL .- "True, she is an extraordinary child. I cannot say how she has interested me." He took out his purse, and began counting its contents. "I have nearly three pounds left," he cried, joyously. "£2. 18s. if I give up the thought of a longer excursion with you, and go quietly home---VANCE .- "And not pay your share of the bill yonder?" LIONEL .- "Ah, I forgot that! But come, I am not too proud to borrow from you, and it is not for a selfish purpose." VANCE .- "Borrow from me. Cato! That comes of falling in with bandits and their children. No, hut let us look at the thing like men of sense. One story is good till another is told. I will call by myself on Rugge tomorrow, and hear what he says; and then, if we judge favourably to the Cobbler's version, we will go at night and talk with the Cobbler's lodgers; and I daresay," added Vance, kindly, but with a sigh-"I daresay the three pounds will be coaxed out of me! After all, her head is worth it. I want an idea for Titania"

LIONEL (joyously). - " My dear | islet-out into pale moonlight. They Vance, you are the best fellow in talked but by fits and starts. What of? the world."

your turn now."

Lionel obeyed; the boat once more nights, on the glass of starry waves! danced along the tide-thoro' reeds O Youth, Youth! -thoro' waves, skirting the grassy

-a thousand things! Bright young VANCE .- "Small compliment to hearts, eloquent young tongues! humankind. Take the oars-it is No sins in the past; hopes gleaming through the future. O summer

CHAPTER VI.

Wherein the Historian tracks the Public Characters that fret their hour on the stage. into the bosom of private life.-The reader is invited to arrive at a conclusion which may often, in periods of perplexity, restore ease to his mind: viz., that if man will reflect on all the hopes he has nourished, all the fears he has admitted, all the projects he has formed, the wisest thing he can do, nine times out of ten, with hope, fear, and project, is to let them end with the chapter-in smoke.

IT was past nine o'clock in the religious Roundhead; and, framedevening of the following day. The in over the low door, there was a exhibition at Mr Rugge's theatre grim faded portrait of a pinchedhad closed for the season in that faced saturnine man, with long lank village, for it was the conclusion of hair, starched band, and a length of the fair. The final performance upper-lip that betokened relentless had been begun and ended some- obstinacy of character, and might what earlier than on former nights. have ourled in sullen glee at the The theatre was to be cleared from monarch's scaffold, or preached an the ground by daybreak, and the interminable sermon to the stout whole company to proceed onward Protector. On a table, under the betimes in the morning. Another deep-sunk window, were neatly arfair awaited them in an adjoining rayed a few sober-looking old books; county, and they had a long journey you would find amongst them before them.

It might have been tenanted by a its ceiling), in which the Bandit Colley's Astrology, Owen Feltham's Gentleman Waife and his Juliet Resolves, Glanville on Witches, the Araminta had gone to their lodgings Pilgrim's Progress, an early edition over the Cobbler's stall. Their of Paradise Lost, and an old Bible rooms were homely enough, but also two flower-pots of clay brightly had an air not only of the com- reddened, and containing stocks fortable, but the picturesque. The also two small worsted rugs, on one little sitting-room was very old- of which rested a carved cocoa-nut, fashioned-panelled in wood that on the other an egg-shaped ball of had once been painted blue-with a crystal,-that last the pride and joy quaint chimney-piece that reached of the Cobbler's visionary soul. A to the ceiling. That part of the door left wide open communicated house spoke of the time of Charles I. with an inner room (very low was cutors permitted him to sleep. In had been; the eye exposed was of the corner of the sitting-room, near that door, was a small horse-hair sofa, which, hy the aid of sheets and a needlework coverlid, did duty for a bed, and was consigned to the Bandit's child. Here the tenderness of the Cohhler's heart was visible. for over the coverlid were strewed sprigs of lavender, and leaves of vervain-the last, be it said, to induce happy dreams, and scare away witchcraft and evil spirits. On another table, near the fireplace, the child was husied in setting out the tea-things for her grandfather. She had left in the property-room of the theatre her robe of spangles and tinsel, and appeared now in a lively, active, affectionate human child; nothing theatrical about her now, yet still, in her graceful movements, so nimble but so noiseless, in her slight fair hands, in her transparent colouring, there was Nature's own lady-that something which strikes us all as well-born and highbred; not that it necessarily is sothe semblances of aristocracy, in female childhood more especially, are often delusive. The souvenance flower wrought into the collars of princes, springs up wild on field and fell.

Gentleman Waife, wrapped negligently in a grey dressing-gown, and seated in an old leathern easy-chair, not seem to heed the little preparations for his comfort, hut, resting drooped on his crossed knees-an attitude rarely seen in a man when his heart is light and his spirits laid aside his theatrical bandage own Sophy-come." over both eyes, he wore a black slept, if the severity of his perse- patch over one, or rather where one singular heauty, dark and brilliant. For the rest, the man had a striking countenance, rugged, and rather ugly than otherwise, hut hy no means unprepossessing; full of lines and wrinkles and strong muscle, with large lips of wondrous pliancy. and an aspect of wistful sagacity. that, no doubt, on occasion could become exquisitely comic-dry comedy - the comedy that makes others roar when the comedian himself is as grave as a judge.

You might see in his countenance. when quite in its natural repose, that Sorrow had passed by there: yet the instant the countenance broke into play, you would think simple frock. She had no longer that Sorrow must have been sent the look of Titania, but that of a about her business as soon as the respect due to that visitor, so accustomed to have her own way. would permit. Though the man was old, you could not call him aged. One-eyed and crippled, still, marking the muscular arm, the expansive chest, you would have scarcely called him broken or in-And hence there was a firm. certain indescribable pathos in his whole appearance, as if Fate had branded, on face and form, characters in which might he read her agencies on career and mind,plucked an eye from intelligence, shortened one limb for life's progress, yet left whim sparkling out in the eye she had spared, and a was evidently out of sorts. He did light heart's wild spring in the limb she had maimed not.

"Come, Grandy, come," said the his cheek on his right hand, his left little girl, coaxingly; "your tea will get quite cold : your toast is ready. and here is such a nice egg-Mr. Merle says you may be sure it is high. His lips moved - he was new laid. Come, don't let that talking to himself. Though he had hateful man fret you; smile on your under-tone,-"if I were alone in | prattling with each other. She got the world."

"If." said Mr. Waife, in a hollow

"O! Grandy."

"'I know a spot on which a bed-post

And do remember where a roper lives." Delightful prospect, not to be indulged: for if I were in peace at one end of the rope, what would chance to my Sophy, left forlorn at the other?"

"Don't talk so, or I shall think you are sorry to have taken care of me."

"Care of thee, O child! and what care? It is thou who takest care of me. Put thy hands from my mouth; sit down, darling, there, opposite, and let us talk. Now, Sophy, thou hast often said that thou wouldst be glad to be out of this mode of life, even for one humbler and harder: think wellis it so?"

"Oh! yes, indeed, grandfather." "No more tinsel dresses and flowery wreaths: no more applause: no more of the dear divine stageexcitement; the heroine and fairy vanished : only a little commonplace child in dingy gingham, with a purblind cripple for thy sole charge and playmate; Juliet Araminta evaporated evermore into little Sophy!"

"It would be so nice!" answered little Sophy, laughing merrily.

"What would make it nice?" asked the Comedian, turning on her his solitary piercing eye, with curious interest in his gaze.

herself on a stool at her grandfather's knee; on that knee she three pounds, we could get away and clasped her tiny hands, and shaking live by ourselves, and make a foraside her curls, looked into his face tinne !" with confident fondness. Evidently these two were much more than word; let it stand. A fortune! grandfather and grandchild-they But still, Sophy, though we should were friends, they were equals, they be free of this thrice execrable Rugge, were in the habit of consulting and the scheme I have in my head lies at his meaning, however covert his humour: and he to the core of her heart, through its careless babble. Between you and me, Reader, I suspect that, in spite of the comedian's sagacious wrinkles, the one was as much a child as the other.

"Well," said Sophy, "I will tell you, Grandy, what would make it nice-no one would vex and affront you, we should be all by ourselves; and then, instead of those nasty lamps, and those dreadful painted creatures, we could go out and play in the fields, and gather daisies; and I could run after butterflies, and when I am tired I should come here, where I am now, any time of the day, and you would tell me stories. and pretty yerses, and teach me to write a little better than I do now, and make such a wise little woman of me; and if I wore gingham, but it need not be dingy, Grandy, it would be all mine, and you would be all mine too, and we'd keep a bird, and you'd teach it to sing; and oh, would it not be nice !"

"But still, Sophy, we should have to live, and we could not live upon daisies and butterflies. And I can't work now-for the matter of that, I never could work-more shame for me, but so it is. Merle says the fault is in the stars-with all my heart. But the stars will not go to the jail or the workhouse instead of me. And though they want nothing to eat, we do."

"But, Grandy, you have said every Sophy left her seat, and placed day since the first walk you took after coming here, that if you had "A fortune! - that's a strong remote from daisies and butterflies. you. And now we must think of We should have to dwell in towns, and exhibit!"

"On a stage, Grandy?" said Sophy, resigned, but sorrowful.

"No, not exactly-a room would do."

"And I should not wear those horrid, horrid dresses, nor mix with those horrid, horrid painted people."

"No." " And we should be quite alone, you and I?"

"Hum! there would be a third." "Oh, Grandy, Grandy!" cried Sophy, in a scream of shrill alarm. "I know-I know; you are thinking of joining us with the pig-faced lady!"

Mr. WAIFE (not a muscle relaxed). -"A well-spoken and pleasing gentlewoman. But no such luck; three pounds would not buy her."

SOPHY .- "I am glad of that: I don't care so much for the Mermaid -she's dead and stuffed. But, oh" (another scream), "perhaps 'tis the Spotted Boy?"

MR. WAIFE .- "Calm your sanguine imagination; you aspire too high! But this I will tell you, that our companion, whatsoever or whosoever that companion may be, will be one you will like."

"I don't believe it," said Sophy, shaking her head. "I only like you.

But who is it?"

"Alas!" said Mr. Waife, "it is no use pampering ourselves with vain hopes; the three pounds are not forthcoming. You heard what that brute Rugge said, that the gentleman who wanted to take your portrait had called on him this morning, and offered 10s, for a sitting-that is, 59, for you, 5s. for Rugge; and Rugge thought the terms reasonable." "But I said I would not sit."

"And when you did say it, you O Jupiter, try the weed! heard Rugge's language to me-to packing up, and be off at dawn with the rest. And," added the comedian. colouring high, "I must again parade, to boors and clowns, this mangled form : again set myself out as a spectacle of bodily infirmityman's last degradation. And this I have come to-I!"

" No. no. Grandy, it will not last long! we will get the three pounds. We have always hoped on !-hope still! And, besides, I am sure those gentlemen will come here to-night. Mr. Merle said they would, at ten o'clock. It is near ten now, and your tea cold as a stone."

She hung on his neck caressingly, kissing his furrowed brow, and leaving a tear there, and thus coaxed him till he set-to quietly at his meal; and Sophy shared it, though she had no appetite in sorrowing for himbut to keep him company; that done, she lighted his pipe with the best canaster-his sole luxury and expense; but she always contrived that he should afford it.

Mr. Waife drew a long whiff, and took a more serene view of affairs. He who doth not smoke hath either known no great griefs, or refuseth himself the softest consolation, next to that which comes from heaven.

"What, softer than woman?" whispers the young reader. Young reader, woman teases as well as consoles. Woman makes half the sorrows which she boasts the privilege to soothe. Woman consoles us, it is true, while we are young and handsome! when we are old and ugly, woman snubs and scolds us. On the whole, then, woman in this scale, the weed in that, Jupiter, hang out thy balance, and weigh them both; and if thou give the preference to woman, all I can say is, the next time Juno ruffles thee-

CHAPTER VII.

The Historian, in pursuance of his stern duties, reveals to the scorn of future ages some of the occult practices which discredit the March of Light in the Nineteenth Century.

"MAY I come in?" asked the | the Cobbler, staring; "I never heard

Cobbler outside the door. "Certainly come in," said Gentleman Waife. Sophy looked wistfully at the aperture, and sighed to see that Merle was alone. She crept up be married." to him.

whispered. "I hope so, pretty one : it ben't ten vet."

"Take a pipe, Merle," said Gentleman Waife, with a Grand Comedian

"No, thank you kindly; I just looked in to ask if I could do anything for ye, in case—in case ye must go to-morrow."

"Nothing; our luggage is small, and soon packed. Sophy has the money to discharge the meaner part of our debt to you." "I don't value that," said the will give us three pounds!"

Cobbler, colouring, "But we value your esteem," said

Mr. Waife, with a smile that would have become a field-marshal, "And so, Merle, you think, if I am a brokendown vagrant, it must be put to the long account of the celestial ball, and speaking slowly, and in bodies!"

would give me date and place of Sophy's birth-that's what I want -I'd take her horryscope. I'm sure there's Ruggo-looks very angryshe'd be lucky."

"I'd rather not, please," said Sophy, timidly.

"Rather not?-very odd. Why?"

"That is odder and odder," quoth hair."

a girl say that afore.

"Wait till she's older, Mr. Merle," said Waife; "girls don't want to know the future till they want to "Summat in that," said the Cob-"Will they not come?" she bler. He took up the crystal. "Have you looked into this ball, pretty one, as I bade ye?"

"Yes, two or three times." "Ha! and what did you see?"

" My own face made very long." said Sophy-"as long as that"- stretching out her hands. The Cobbler shook his head dolefully, and screwing up one eye.

applied the other to the mystic ball. MR. WAIFE .- " Perhaps you will see if those two gentlemen are coming." SOPHY .- "Do, do! and if they

The COBBLER (triumphantly) .--"Then you do care to know tho future, after all ?" SOPHY .- "Yes so far as that goes :

but don't look any farther, pray." The COBBLER (intent upon the ierks).- "A mist now. Ha! an arm "Not a doubt of it," returned the with a besom—sweeps all before it."

Cobbler, solemnly. "I wish you SOPHY (frightened).—"Send it away, please," COBBLER. - It is gone.

savage, indeed." WAIFE .- "Good sign that! proceed." COBBLER .- "Shakes his fist; gone.

"I don't want to know the future." Ha! a young man, boyish, dark "That is the young gentleman—the she might make your fortune." very young one, I mean-with the kind eyes; is he coming?-is he, of countenance).- "Ah! I never is he?"

WAIFE .- "Examine his pockets! the gift, I could teach it her-eh?" do you see there three pounds?"

interrupting. Ha! he is talking with another gentleman, bearded." SOPHY (whispering to her grandfather) .- "The old young gentleman." COBBLEE (putting down the crystal, and with great decision) .--"They are coming here; I see'd them at the corner of the lane, by the public-house, two minutes' walk to this door." He took out a great silver-watch: "Look, Sophy, when the minute-hand gets there (or before, if they walk briskly), you will hear them knock."

Sophy clasped her hands in mute suspense, half-credulous, half-doubting: then she went and opened the room-door, and stood on the landingplace to listen. Merle approached the Comedian, and said in a low voice, "I wish for your sake she had the gift,"

WAIFE .- "The gift! -- the three pounds !--so do I !"

COBBLER .- " Pooh! worth a hundred times three pounds; the giftthe spirituous gift."

WAIFE.- "Spirituous! don't like the epithet,-smells of gin !"

COBBLER .- " Spirituous gift to

SOPHY (clapping her hands) .- | see in the crystal: if she had that,

WAIFE (with a sudden change thought of that. But if she has not

The COBBLER (indignantly),-" I COBBLER (testily) .- "Don't be a did not think to hear this from you. Mr. Waife. Teach her-you! make her an impostor, and of the wickedest kind, inventing lies between earth and them as dwell in the seven spheres! Fie! No, if she hasn't the gift natural, let her alone; what here is not heaven-sent is devil-> taught." WAIFE (awed, but dubious) .--"Then you really think you saw all that you described, in that glass egg ? "

COBBLER,- "Think !-am I a liar? I spoke truth, and the proof is - there !" - Rat-tat went the knocker at the door.

"The two minutes are just up," said the Cobbler: and Cornelius Agrippa could not have said it with more wizardly effect,

"They are come, indeed," said Sophy, re-entering the room softly ; "I hear their voices at the threshold."

The Cobbler passed by in silence. descended the stairs, and conducted Vance and Lionel into the Comedian's chamber : there he left them, his brow overcast. Gentleman Waife had displeased him sorely.

CHAPTER VIII.

Showing the arts by which a man, however high in the air Nature may have formed his nose, may be led by that nose, and in directions perversely opposite to those which, in following his nose, he might be supposed to take; and therefore, that nations the most liberally endowed with practical good sense, and in conceit thereof, carrying their noses the most horizontally aloof, when they come into conference with nations more skilled in diplomacy, and more practised in "stage play," end by the surrender of the precise object which it was intended they should surrender before they laid their noses together.

WE all know that Demosthenes said, the fort of Cronstadt, and the fort Everything in oratory was acting- of Cronstadt have eved Admiral stage-play. Is it in oratory alone that the saving holds good? Apply it to all circumstances of life,-" stageplay, stage-play, stage-play ! "-only ars est celare artem, conceal the art. Gleesome in soul to behold his visitors, calculating already on the three pounds to be extracted from them, seeing in that hope the crisis in his own checkered existence, Mr. Waife rose from his seat in superb upocrisia or stage-play, and asked, with mild dignity.- "To what am I indebted. gentlemen, for the honour of your visit ?"

In spite of his nose, even Vance was taken aback. Pope says that Lord Bolingbroke had "the nobleman air." A great comedian Lord Bolingbroke surely was, But, ah, had Pope seen Gentleman Waife! Taking advantage of the impression he had created, the actor added, with the finest imaginable breeding, -"But pray be seated;" and, once seeing them seated, resumed his easy-chair, and felt himself master of the situation.

"Hum!" said Vance, recovering his self-possession, after a pause-"hum!"

"Hem!" re-echoed Gentleman

Napier.

Lionel struck in with that youthful boldness which plays the deuce with all dignified strategical science. "You must be aware why we come, sir; Mr. Merle will have explained. My friend, a distinguished artist, wished to make a sketch, if you do not object, of this young lady's very "--- " Pretty little face." quoth Vance, taking up the discourse. "Mr. Rugge, this morning, was willing,-I understand that your , grandchild refused. We are come here to see if she will be more complaisant under your own roof, or under Mr. Merle's, which, I take it, is the same thing for the present" -Sophy had sidled up to Lionel. He might not have been flattered if he knew why she preferred him to Vance. She looked on him as a boy -a fellow-child-and an instinct. moreover, told her, that more easily through him than his shrewd-looking bearded guest could she attain the object of her cupidity-" three "Three pounds!" whispered Sophy, with the tones of an angel, into Lionel's thrilling ear.

pounds!"

MR. WAIFE,-"Sir, I will be frank Waife: and the two men eved each with you." At that ominous comother much in the same way as mencement, Mr. Vance recoiled, and Admiral Napier might have eyed mechanically buttoned his trousers pocket. Mr. Waife noted the generature with his one eya, and proceeded cautiously, feeling his way, as it were, towards the interior of the recess thus protected. "My grandchild declined your fastering proposal with my full approbation. She did not consider—neither did I—that the managerial rights of Mr. Rugse from the contract of t

"'My face is my fortune, sir,' she said."
Vance smiled — Lionel laughed;

Sophy nestled still nearer to the boy.

GENTLEMAN WAIFE (with pathos and dignity).—" YOU see before you an old man; one way of life is the same to me as another. But she—do you think Mr. Rugge's stage the right place for her?"

VANCE.—" Certainly not. Why did you not introduce her to the London manager who would have engaged yourself?"

Waife could not conceal a slight do I know she would have succeeded? She had never then trod the boards. Besides, what trikes you as so good in a village show, may be poor enough in a metropolitan theatre. Gentiemen, I did my best for her—you cannot think otherwise, since she maintains me! I am no Eddipus, yet she is my Antigooc."

Vance.—"You know the classics, sir. Mr. Merle said you were a scholar!—read Sophocles in his native, Greek, I presume, sir?"

MR. WAIFE.—"You jeer at the unfortunate; I am used to it." VANCE (confused).—"I did not VANCE (connessed).—I did not mean to wound you—I beg pardon. But your language and manner are not what—what one might expect to find in a—in a—Bandit persecuted by a remorseless Baron."

MR. WAIFE-"Sir. you say you are an artist. Have you heard no tales of your professional brethrenmen of genius the highest, who won fame which I never did, and failed of fortune as I have done? Their own fault, perhaps,-improvidence, wild habits-ignorance of the way how to treat life and deal with their fellow-men; such fault may have been mine too. I suffer for it; no matter - I ask none to save me. You are a painter-you would place her features on your canvass-you would have her rank amongst your own creations. She may become a part of your immortality. Princes may gaze on the effigies of the innocent happy childhood, to which your colours lend imperishable glow. They may ask who and what was this fair creature? Will you answer, 'One whom I found in tinsel, and so left. sure that she would die in rags!'-Save her!"

Liouel drew forth his purse, and poured its contents on the table. Vance covered them with his broad hand, and swept them into his own pocket! At that sinister action Waife felt his heart sink into his soes; but his face was as calm as a Roman's, only he resumed his pipe with a prolonged and test whiff.

"It is I who am to take the portrait, and it is I who will pay for it," said Vance. "I understand that you have a pressing occasion for"— "Three pounds!" muttered Sophy, sturdily, through the tears which her grandfather's pathos had drawn forth from her downest eyes— "Three pounds-three—"threen"

"You shall have them. But listen; I meant only to take a sketch —I must now have a finished portrait. I cannot take this by candlelight. You must let me come here to-morrow; and yet to-morrow, I understand, you meant to leave?" WAIFE—"If you will generously bestow on us the sum you say, we ing to comprehend it, he thrust shall not leave the village till you back the money, and said, "No, sir, have completed your picture. It -not a shilling till the picture is is Mr. Rugge and his company we completed. Nay, to relieve your will leave."

ask what you propose to do, towards receive nothing till Mr. Rugge is a new livelihood for yourself and gone. True, he has no right to any your grandchild, by the help of a share in it. But you see before you sum which is certainly much for a man who, when it comes to argume to pay-enormous, I might say, quoad me-but small for a capital whereon to set up a business?"

answer that very natural question at present. Let me assure you that money-give us what, were I rich, that precise sum is wanted for an I should value more highly,-a little investment which promises her and of your time. You, sir, are an artist; myself an easy existence. But to insure my scheme, I must keep it secret. Do you believe me?"

"I do!" cried Lionel; and Sophy. whom, by this time, he had drawn upon his lap, put her arm gratefully round his neck.

"There is your money, sir, beforehand," said Vance, declining downward his betrayed and resentful nose, and depositing three sovereigns on the table.

"And how do you know," said Waife, smiling, "that I may not be off to-night with your money and your model?"

"Well," said Vance, curtly, "P think it is on the cards. Still as John Kemble said when rebuked for too large an alms,

'It is not often that I do these things, But when I do, I do them handsomely,""

"Well applied, and well delivered, sir," said the Comedian, "only you should put a little more emphasis on the word do."

"Did I not put enough? I am sure I felt it strongly; no one can I feel the do more!"

a genial brightness-the équivoque he gave a lively idea of each. And mind, I will own that, had I no VANCE.—" And may I venture to scruple more delicate, I would rather ing, could never take a wrangler's degree-never get over the Ass's Bridge, sir. Plucked at it scores of WAIFE.-" Excuse me if I do not times clean as a feather. But do not go yet. You came to give us and you, young gentleman?" addressing Lionel.

> LIONEL (colouring). - " I - am nothing as vet."

WAIFE .- "You are fond of the drama, I presume, both of you? Apropos of John Kemble, you, sir, said that you have never heard him. Allow me, so far as this cracked voice can do it, to give you a faint idea of him."

"I shall be delighted," said Vance, drawing nearer to the table, and feeling more at his ease. "But since I see you smoke, may I take the liberty to light my cigar?"

"Make yourself at home," said Gentleman Waife, with the goodhumour of a fatherly host, And, all the while, Lionel and Sophy were babbling together, she still upon his Waife began his imitation of John Kemble. Despite the cracked voice, it was admirable. One imitation drew on another; then succeeded anecdotes of the Stage, of the Senate, of the Bar. Waife had heard great orators, whom every one still admires for the speeches Waife's pliant face relaxed into which nobody, nowadays, ever reads; charmed him. However, not affect- then came sayings of dry humour, and odd scraps of worldly obser- | me, kiss me! You are saved at vation; and time flew on pleasantly, till the clock struck twelve, and the young guests tore themselves away.

" Merle, Merle ! " cried the Comedian, when they were gone.

Merle appeared.

"We don't go to-morrow. When Rugge sends for us (as he will do at daybreak), say so. You shall lodge us a few days longer, and then- is, What will he do with it?" and then-my little Sophy, kiss least from those horrid painted creatures!"

"Ah, ah!" growled Merle from below, "he has got the money! Glad to hear it. But," he added, as he glanced at sundry weird and astrological symbols with which he had been diverting himself, "that's not it. The true horary question

CHAPTER IX.

The Historian shows that, notwithstanding the progressive spirit of the times, a Briton is not permitted, without an effort, "to progress" according to his own inclinations.

SOPHY could not sleep. At first to, and to prattle with, seemed to terror of the "painted creatures" and her own borrowed tinsel.

herself to tend and to pet, to listen cording angel.

she was too happy. Without being her the consummation of human conscious of any degradation in her felicity. Ah, but should she be all lot amongst the itinerant artists of alone? Just as she was lulling her-Mr. Rugge's exhibition (how could self into a doze, that question seized she, when her beloved and revered and roused her. And then it was protector had been one of those not happiness that kept her waking artists for years?) yet instinctively -it was what is less rare in the she shrunk from their contact. female breast, curiosity. Who was Doubtless, while absorbed in some to be the mysterious third, to whose stirring part, she forgot companions, acquisition the three pounds were audience, all, and enjoyed what she evidently to be devoted? What performed-necessarily enjoyed, for new face had she purchased by the her acting was really excellent, and loan of her own? Not the Pigwhere no enjoyment there no excel- faced Lady, nor the Spotted Boy. lence; but when the histrionio en- Could it be the Norfolk Giant, or thusiasm was not positively at work, the Calf with Two Heads? Horshe crept to her grandfather with rible idea! Monstrous phantassomething between loathing and magoria began to stalk before her eyes; and to charm them away, with great fervour she fell to saving But, more than all, she felt acutely her prayers - an act of devotion every indignity or affront offered to which she had forgotten, in her ex-Gentleman Waife. Heaven knows, citement, to perform before resting these were not few; and to escape her head on the pillow-an omission, from such a life-to be with her let us humbly hope, not noted down grandfather alone, have him all to in very dark characters by the re-

That act over, her thoughts took | not, despair, O Philanthropy, of their a more comely aspect than had been after-lives ! worn by the preceding phantasies, reflected Lionel's kind looks, and repeated his gentle words. "Heaven hless him!" she said with emphasis, as a supplement to the habitual prayers; and then tears gathered to her grateful eyelids, for she was one of those beings whose tears come slow from sorrow, quick from affection. And so the grey dawn found her still wakeful, and she rose, bathed her oheeks in the cold fresh water, and drew them forth with a glow like Hebe's. Dressing herself with the quiet activity which characterised all her movements. she then opened the casement and inhaled the air. All was still in the narrow lane, the shops yet unclosed. But on the still trees behind the shops the hirds were beginning to stir and chirp. Chanticleer, from some neighbouring yard, rung out his brisk reveillée. Pleasant Eng- himself. lish summer dawn in the pleasant English country village. She stretched her graceful neck far from the casement, trying to catch a glimpse of the hlue river. She had seen its majestic flow on the father, baggage?" day they had arrived at the fair. and longed to gain its banks: then her servitude to the stage forbade her. Now she was to be free! O joy! Now she might have her careless hours of holiday; and, forgetful of Waife's warning that their vocation must be plied in towns, she let of yourself her fancy run riot amidst visions of Rugge!" green fields and laughing waters, and in fond delusion gathered the daisies and chased the hutterflies. Changeling transferred into that lowest world of Art from the cradle of civil Nature, her human child's heart yearned for the human child- mute, trusting, perhaps, to the imlike delights. All children love the posing effect of his attitude. The country, the flowers, the sward, the Cobbler, yielding to the impulse of

She closed the window, smiling to herself; stole through the adjoining doorway, and saw that her grandfather was still asleep. Then she husied herself in putting the little sitting-room to rights, reset the table for the morning meal, watered the stocks, and finally took up the crystal and looked into it with awe. wondering why the Cohhler could see so much, and she only the distorted reflection of her own face. So interested, however, for once, did she become in the inspection of this mystic globe, that she did not notice the dawn pass into broad daylight. nor hear a voice at the door below -nor, in short, take into cognition the external world, till a heavy tread shook the floor, and then, starting, she heheld the Remorseless Baron. with a face black enough to have darkened the crystal of Dr. Dee

"Ho, ho," said Mr. Rugge, in hissing accents, which had often thrilled the threepenny gallery with anticipative horror. "Rebellious, eh?-won't come? Where's your grand-

Sophy let fall the crystal-a mercy it was not broken-and gazed vacantly on the Baron.

"Your vile scamp of a grandfather?"

SOPHY (with spirit) .- " He is not vile. You ought to he ashamed speaking so, Mr.

Here, simultaneously, Mr. Waife, hastily endued in his grey dressinggown, presented himself at the aperture of the bedroom door, and the Cohhler on the threshold of the sitting-room. The Comedian stood birds, the butterflies; or if some do untheatric man, put his head doggedly on one side, and, with both it np gently, and come down-stairs hands on his hips, said-

"Civil words to my lodgers, master, or out you go!"

The Remorseless Baron glared vindictively, first at one and then at the other; at length he strode up to Waife, and said, with a withering grin, "I have something to say to you; shall I say it before your landlord?"

The Comedian waved his hand to the Cobbler. " Leave us, my friend; I shall not require you. Step this way, Mr. Rugge." Rugge entered the bedroom, and Waife closed the door behind him.

"Anan," quoth the Cobbler, scratching his head, "I don't quite her ear to the keyhole, but that take your grandfather's giving in, seemed even to her a mean thing, British ground here! But your if not absolutely required by the Ascendant cannot surely be in such necessity of the case. So there she malignant conjunction with that still stood, her head bent down, her obstreperous tyrant as to bind you finger raised; oh that Vance could to him hand and foot. Let's see have so painted her! what the Crystal thinks of it, Take with me." "Please, no; I'll stay near grandfather," said Sophy resolutely. "He shan't be left helpless with that rude man."

The Cobbler could not help smiling. "Lord love you," said he; "vou have a spirit of your own. and if you were my wife, I should be afraid of you. But I won't stand here eavesdropping; mayhap your grandfather has secrets I'm not to hear; call me if I'm wanted." He descended. Sophy, with less noble disdain of eavesdropping, stood in the centre of the room, holding her breath to listen. She heard no sound-she had half a mind to put

CHAPTER X.

Showing the causes why Men and Nations, when one man or Nation wishes to get for its own arbitrary purposes what the other Man or Nation does not desire to part with, are apt to ignore the mild precepts of Christianity, shock the sentiments, and upset the theories, of Peace Societies.

Rugge, in a whisper, when Waife duct?" had drawn him to the farthest end and at your own request, you are thank you, and depart." going to quit me without warning

"AM I to understand," said Mr. | -French leave-is that British con-

"Mr. Rugge," replied Waife, deof the inner room, with the bed- precatingly, "I have no engagement curtains between their position and with you beyond an experimental the door deadening the sound of trial. We were free on both sides their voices-" am I to understand for three months-you to dismiss that, after my taking you and that us any day, we to leave you. The child to my theatre out of charity, experiment does not please us; we RUGGE .- "That is not the truth.

I said I was free to dismiss you both, been spent in your service. Mr. if the child did not suit. You, poor Rugge, - If their record had been helpless creature, could be of no use. But I never heard you say you were to be free too. Stands to reason not! Put my engagements at a Waife's mercy! I, Lorenzo Rugge !- stuff! But I'm a just man, and a liberal man, and if you think you ought to have a higher salary, if this ungrateful proceeding has been enjoying a salary and is only, as I take it, a strike for wages. I will meet you. Juliet refer to an earlier dodge in its check-Araminta does play better than I ered existence. Ha sir you wince ! could have supposed; and I'll conclude an engagement on good terms, as we were to have done if the experiment answered, for three vears."

very good, Mr. Rugge, but it is not have good reason for suspicion; and a strike. My little girl does not like if you sneak off in this way, and the life at any price; and since she cheat me out of my property in supports me, I am bound to please Juliet Araminta, I will leave no her. Besides," said the actor, with stone unturned to prove what I a stiffer manner, "you have broken suspect - look to it, slight man! faith with me. It was fully under- Come, I don't wish to quarrel; make stood that I was to appear no more it up, and" (drawing out his pocketon your stage; all my task was to book) "if you want cash down, and advise with you in the performances, will have an engagement in black remodel the plays, help in the stage- and white for three years for Juliet management; and you took advantage of my penury, and, when I asked for a small advance, insisted on forcing these relics of what I was upon the public pity. Enough-we part. I bear no malice."

RUGGE,-" Oh, don't you? No more do I. But I am a Briton, and I have the spirit of one. You had better not make an enemy of me." WAIFE .- " I am above the necessity of making enemies. I have an enemy ready made in myself."

Rugge placed a strong bony hand upon the cripple's arm. "I dare say you have! A bad conscience, sir. How would you like your past life looked into, and hlabbed out?"

-"The last four years of it have round the latter, flung out her own blabbed out for my benefit, there would not have been a dry eye in the house."

RUGGE .- "I disdain your sneer. When a scorpion nursed at my bosom sneers at me-I leave it to its own reflections. But I don't speak of the years in which that scorpion smoking canaster at my expense. I I suspect I can find out something about you which would-"

WAIFE (fiercely), - " Would what?"

RUGGE .- "Oh, lower your tone, Waife shook his head. "You are sir; no bullying me. I suspect! I Araminta, you may squeeze a good sum out of me, and go yourself where you please; you'll never be troubled by me. What I want is the girl." All the actor laid aside, Waife growled out, "And hang me, sir, if you shall have the girl!" At this moment Sophy opened the door wide, and entered boldly. She had heard her grandfather's voice raised, though its hoarse tones did not allow her to distinguish his words. She was alarmed for him. She came in, his guardian fairy, to protect him from the oppressor of six feet high. Rugge's arm was raised, not indeed to strike, but rather to declaim. Sophy slid between him GENTLEMAN WAIFE (mournfully). and her grandfather, and, clinging arm, the forefinger raised menacingly towards the Remorseless Baron. How you would have clapped if you had seen her so at Covent Garden! But I'll swear the child did not know she was acting. Rugge did, and was struck with admiration and regretful rage at the idea of losing her.

"Bravo!" said he, involuntarily -" Come-come, Waife, look at her -she was born for the stage. My heart swells with pride. She is my property, morally speaking; make her so legally-and hark, in your ear-fifty pounds. Take me in the humour - Golgonda opens - fifty pounds!"

" No," said the vagrant.

"Well," said Rugge, sullenly; "let her speak for herself."

"Speak, child. You don't wish to return to Mr. Rugge-and without me, too-do you, Sophy?"

"Without you, Grandy! I'd rather die first."

"You hear her; all is settled between us. You have had our services up to last night; you have paid us up to last night; and so good morning to yon, Mr. Rugge."

"My dear child," said the manager, softening his voice as much as he could, "do consider. You shall be so made of without that stupid old man. You think me cross, but 'tis he who irritates, and puts me out of temper. I'm uncommon fond of children. I had a babe of my own once-upon my honour, I had-and if it had not been for convulsions. caused by teething, I should be a father still. Supply to me the place of that beloved babe. You shall have such fine dresses; all newchoose'em yourself-minced vealand raspberry tarts for dinner every Sunday. In three years, under my care, you will become a great actress, and make your fortune, and marry a lord actresses-whereas, with him, what the form of the angry manager, tho will you do? drudge, and rot, and starve; and he can't live long, and then where will you be? 'Tis a shame to hold her so, you idle old vagabond."

"I don't hold her." said Waife. trying to push her away. "There's something in what the man says. Choose for yourself, Sonhy," SOPHY (suppressing a sob). -"How can you have the heart to talk so, Grandy? I tell you, Mr. Rugge, you are a bad man, and I hate you, and all about you-and I'll stay with grandfather - and I don't care if I do starve-he shan't!"

MR. RUGGE (clapping both hands on the crown of his hat, and striding to the door) .- "William Waife, beware: 'tis done. I'm your enemy. As for you, too dear, but abandoned. infant, stay with him-you'll find ont very soon who and what he is-your pride will have a fall, when-"

Waife sprang forward, despite his lameness - both his fists clenched. his one eye ablaze; his broad burly torso confronted and daunted the stormy manager. Taller and younger though Rugge was he cowered before the cripple he had so long taunted and humbled. The words stood arrested on his tongue. "Leave the room instantly!" thundered the actor, in a voice no longer broken. "Blacken my name before that child by one word, and I will dash the next down your throat."

Rugge rushed to the door-and keeping it aiar between Waife and himself, he then thrust in his head, hissing forth, "Fly, caitiff, fly! my revenge shall track your secret, and place you in my power. Juliet Araminta shall yet be mine." With these awful words the Remorseless Baron cleared the stairs in two bounds, and was out of the house.

Waife smiled contemptnously. -lords go out of their wits for great | But as the street-door clanged on colour faded from the old man's face. | and, with one quick gasp as for Exhausted by the excitement he breath, fainted away, had gone through, he sank on a chair.

CHAPTER XI.

Progress of the Fine Arts.-Biographical Anecdotes.-Fluctuations in the Value of Money .- Speculative Tendencies of the Time.

WHATEVER the shock which the Lionel kissed the child and pressed . brutality of the Remorseless Baron her to his side. It is astonishing inflicted on the nervous system of the persecuted but triumphant Bandit, it had certainly subsided by the time Vance and Lionel entered Waife's apartment, for they found grandfather and grandchild seated near the open window, at the corner of the table (on which they had made room for their operations by Heads?" the removal of the carved cocoa-nut. the crystal egg, and the two flowerpots), eagerly engaged, with many a silvery laugh from the lips of and a cheery "Good day, gentle-Sophy, in the game of dominoes.

Mr. Waife had been devoting himself, for the last hour and more, to the instruction of Sophy in the mysteries of that intellectual amusement; and such pains did he take, and so impressive were his exhortations. that his happy pupil could not help thinking to herself that this was the new art upon which Waife depended for their future livelihood. She sprang up, however, at the entrance of the visitors, her face beaming with grateful smiles; and, running to Lionel, and taking him by the vestment." hand, while she curtsied with more respect to Vance, she exclaimed,-"We are free! thanks to you- well as the Norfolk Giant?" thanks to you both! He is gone! Mr. Rugge is gone."

how paternal he felt-how much she had crept into his heart.

"Pray, sir," asked Sophy, timidly, glancing to Vance, "has the Norfolk Giant gone too?"

VANCE .- "I fancy so-all the shows were either gone or going." SOPHY .- " The Calf with Two

VANCE .- " Do you regret it?" SOPHY .- "Oh, dear, no."

Waife, who, after a profound bow, men," had hitherto remained silent. putting away the dominoes, now said-" I suppose, sir, you would like at once to begin your sketch?" VANCE .- "Yes; I have brought all my tools-see, even the canvas. I wish it were larger, but it is all I have with me of that material-'tis already stretched-just let me arrange the light."

WAIFE .- "If you don't want me, gentlemen, I will take the air for half an hour or so. In fact, I may now feel free to look after my in-

SOPHY (whispering Lionel). -"You are sure the Calf has gone as

Lionel wonderingly replied that he thought so; and Waife disap-"So I saw on passing the green; peared into his room, whence he stage and all," said Vance, while soon emerged, having doffed his no means threadbare, and well brushed. Hat, stick, and gloves in hand, he really seemed respectable -more than respectable-Gentleman Waife every inch of him; and saying, "Look your best, Sophy, and sit still, if you can," nodded pleasantly to the three, and hobbled down the stairs. Sophy-whom Vance had just settled into a chair, with her head bent partially down (tbree quarters), as the artist had released

"The loose train of her amber-dropping hair," and was contemplating aspect and position with a painter's meditative eye-started up, to his great discomposure, and rushed to the window. She returned to her seat with her mind much relieved. Waife was walking in an opposite direction to that which led towards the whileme quarters of the Norfolk Giant and the Two-headed Calf.

"Come, come," said Vance, impatiently, "you have broken an idea in half. I beg you will not stir till I have placed you-and then, if all else of you be still, you may exercise your tongue. I give you leave to talk."

SOPHY (penitentially) .- " I am so sorry-I beg pardon. Will that do sir ?" VANCE .- "Head a little more to the right - so, Titania watching Bottom asleep. Will you lie on the floor, Lionel, and do Bottom?"

LIONEL (indignantly) .- "Bottom! Have I an ass's head?" VANCE. - Immaterial ! easily imagine that you have one.

I want merely an outline of figure -something sprawling and ungainly."

LIONEL (sulkily) .- "Much obliged to you-imagine that too,"

VANCE.—"Don't be so disobliging.

dressing-gown for a black coat, by fondly at something-expression in the eve."

Lionel at once reclined himself incumbent in a position as little sprawling and ungainly as he could well contrive.

VANCE. - "Fancy, Miss Sophy, that this young gentleman is very dear to you. Have you got a brother?"

SOPHY .- " Ah, no, sir." VANCE .- " Hum. But you have, or have had, a doll?" SOPHY .- "Oh, yes; grandfather gave me one."

VANCE .- "And you were fond of that doll?"

SOPHY .- " Very."

VANCE.- "Fancy that young gentleman is your doll grown big-that it is asleep, and you are watching that no one hurts it-Mr. Rugge. for instance. Throw your whole soul into that thought-love for doll, apprehension of Rugge, Lionel, keep still and shut your eyesdo."

LIONEL (grumbling),-" I did not come here to be made a doll of."

VANCE .- " Coax him to be quiet, Miss Sophy, and sleep peaceably, or I shall do him a mischief. I can be a Rugge too, if I am put out."

SOPHY (in the softest tones) .-"Do try and sleep, sir-shall I get you a pillow ? "

LIONEL,-" No. thank you-I'm very comfortable now" (settling his head upon his arm, and after one upward glance towards Sophy, the lids closed reluctantly over his softened eyes). A ray of sunshine came aslant through the half-shut window, and played along the boy's clustering hair and smooth pale cheek. Sophy's gaze rested on him most benignly.

"Just so," said Vance; "and now be silent till I have got the attitude and fixed the look."

The artist sketched away rapidly It is necessary that she should look with a bold practised hand, and all was silent for about half an hour, when he said, "You may get up, Lionel: I have done with you for the present."

SOPHY .- "And me, too-may I see?"

VANCE.—" No; but you may talk now. So you had a doll? What has become of it?" SOPHY .- "I left it behind, sir. Grandfather thought it would distract me from attending to his lessons, and learning my part," VANCE .- "You love your grandfather more than the doll?"

SOPHY .- "Oh! a thousand million million times more."

VANCE,-" He brought you up, I suppose? Have you no father-no mother?"

SOPHY .- "I have only grandfather."

LIONEL. - " Have you always lived with him?"

SOPHY .- "Dear me, no; I was with Mrs. Crane till grandfather came from abroad, and took me away, and put me with some very kind people; and then, when grandfather had that bad accident, I came to stay with him, and we have been together ever since."

LIONEL.-" Was Mrs. Crane no relation of yours?"

SOPHY .- " No, I suppose not, for she was not kind-I was so miserable: but don't talk of it-I forget that now. I only wish to remember from the time grandfather took me in his lap, and told me to be a good child, and love him; and I have been happy ever since."

"You are a dear good child," said Lionel, emphatically, "and I wish I had you for my sister."

VANCE. - "When your grandfather has received from me that exorbitant-not that I grudge itsecret. I must not pump you."

SOPHY .- " What will he do with it? I should like to know too, sir: but whatever it is, I don't care, so long as I and grandfather are together."

Here Waife re-entered. " Well. how goes on the picture?"

VANCE .- "Tolerably for the first sitting: I require two more."

WAIFE.—Certainly; only-only" (he drew aside Vance, and whispered), "only the day after to-morrow. I fear I shall want the money. It is an occasion that never will occur again-I would seize it."

VANCE.-" Take the money now." WAIFE .- "Well, thank you, sir; you are sure now that we shall not run away; and I accept your kindness: it will make all safe."

Vance, with surprising alacrity. slipped the sovereigns into the old man's hand; for, truth to say, though thrifty, the Artist was really generous. His organ of caution was large, but that of acquisitiveness moderate. Moreover, in those moments when his soul expanded with his art, he was insensibly less alive to the value of money. And strange it is that, though states strive to fix for that commodity the most abiding standards, yet the value of money to the individual who regards it, shifts and fluctuates, goes up and down half-a-dozen times a-day. For my part. I honestly declare that there are hours in the twenty-four-such, for instance, as that just before breakfast, or that succeeding a page of this History in which I have been put out of temper with my performance and myself, when any one in want of five shillings at my disposal would find my value of that sum put it quite out of his reach; while at other times-just sum, I should like to ask, What will after dinner, for instance, or when he do with it? As he said it was a I have effected what seems to me a happy stroke, or a good bit of colour, in this historical composi- gazed at their departing forms from tion-the value of those five shil- the open window; Waife stumped lings is so much depreciated that I about the room, rubbing his hands, might be-I think so, at least-I - "He'll do, he'll do; I always might be almost tempted to give thought so." them away for nothing. Under "Who'll do?-the young gentlesome such mysterious influences in the money-market, Vance, therefore, felt not the loss of his three sovereigns; and, returning to his easel drove away Lionel and Sophy. who had taken that opportunity to gaze on the canvass.

"Don't do her justice at all," quoth Lionel; "all the features exaggerated."

"And you pretend to paint!" returned Vance, in great scorn, and throwing a cloth over his canvass. "To-morrow, Mr. Waife, the same hour. Now, Lionel, get your hat, and come away." Vance carried off the canvass, am, and I will not hate it." and Lionel followed slowly. Sophy Sophy turned,man? Do what?"

WAIFE .- "The young gentleman ?-as if I was thinking of him, Our new companion-I have been with him this last hour. Wonderful natural gifts."

SOPHY (ruefully) .- " It is alive, then?"

WAIFE.- "Alive! yes, I should think so." SOPHY (half-crying),-" I'm very sorry; I know I shall hate it." WAIFE,-"Tut, darling-get me my pipe-I'm happy."

SOPHY (cutting short her fit of ill-humour) .- " Are you? -then I

CHAPTER XII.

In which it is shown that a man does this or declines to do that for reasons best known to himself-a reserve which is extremely conducive to the social interests of a community; since the conjecture into the origin and nature of those reasons stimulates the inquiring faculties, and furnishes the staple of modern conversation, And as it is not to be denied that, if their neighbours left them nothing to guess at, three-fourths of civilised humankind, male or female, would have nothing to talk about; so we cannot too gratefully encourage that needful curiosity, termed by the inconsiderate tittle-tattle or scandal, which saves the vast majority of our species from being reduced to the degraded condition of dumb animals,

THE next day the sitting was re- with his visitors, as if their equal in newed; but Waife did not go out, position, their superior in years; and the conversation was a little then abruptly, humble, deprecating, more restrained; or rather, Waife almost obsequious, almost servile; had the larger share in it. The and then, again, jerked, as it were, Comedian, when he pleased, could into pride and stiffness, falling back, certainly be very entertaining. It as if the effort were impossible, into was not so much in what he said, as meek dejection. Still the prevalent his manner of saying it. He was a character of the man's mood and strange combination of sudden ex- talk was social, quaint, cheerful. tremes at one while on a tone of Evidently he was, hy original temeasy hut not undignified familiarity perament, a droll and joyous huand, withal, an infautine simplicity at times, like the clever man who never learns the world, and is always taken in.

A circumstance, trifling in itself. but suggestive of speculation either as to the character or antecedent. circumstances of Gentleman Waife, did not escape Vance's observation. Since his rupture with Mr. Rugge, there was a considerable amelioration in that affection of the traches. which, while his engagement with Rugge lasted, had rendered the comedian's dramatic talents unavailable on the stage. He now expressed himself without the pathetic hoarseness or cavernous wheeze which had previously thrown a wet blanket over his efforts at disconrse. But Vance put no very stern construction on the dissimulation which this change seemed to denote. Since Waife was still one-eyed and a cripple, he might very excusably shrink from reappearance on the stage, and affect a third infirmity to save his pride from the exhibition of the two infirmities that were genuine.

That which most puzzled Vance was that which had most puzzled the Cobbler,-What could the man once have been?-how fallen so low ?-for fall it was, that was clear. The painter, though not himself of patrician extraction, had been much in the best society. He had been a petted favourite in great houses. He had travelled. He had seen the world. He had the habits and instincts of good society.

Now, in what the French term the beau monde, there are little traits that reveal those who have entered it,-certain tricks of phrase, certain modes of expression-even the pronunciation of familiar words, even the modulation of an accent. A man | that saved me-say no more of that, of the most refined bearing may not no more of that. But I have spoiled mourist, with high animal spirits; have these peculiarities; a man, otherwise coarse and hrusque in his manner, may. The slang of the beau monde is quite apart from the code of high-breeding. Now and then, something in Waife's talk seemed to show that he had lighted on that beau-world; now and then, that something wholly vanished. So that Vance might have said, "He has been admitted there, not inhahited it."

Yet Vance could not feel sure, after all; comedians are such takes in. But was the man, by the profession of his earlier life, a comedian? Vance asked the question adroitly.

"You must have taken to the stage young?" said he.

"The stage !" said Waife : " if you mean the public stage-no. I have acted pretty often in youth, even in childhood, to amuse others, never professionally to support myself, till Mr. Rugge civilly engaged me four years ago."

"Is it possible-with your excellent education! But pardon me: I have hinted my surprise at your late vocation before, and it displeased vou."

"Displeased me!" said Waife, with an abject, depressed manner . "I hope I said nothing that would have misbecome a poor broken vagabond like me. I am no prince in disguise -a good-for-nothing varlet who should be too grateful to have something to keep himself from a dunghill."

LIONEL .- " Don't talk so. And hut for your accident you might now be the great attraction on the Metropolitan Stage. Who does not respect a really fine actor?"

WAIFE (gloomily) .- " The Metropolitan Stage! I was talked into it; I am glad even of the accident your sitting: Sophy, you see, has | I ask another favour? Mr. Vance left her chair "

"I have done for to-day," said Vance; "to-morrow, and my task is ended."

whispered him; the painter, after a pause, nodded silently, and then said

"We are going to enjoy the fine weather on the Thames (after I have put away these things), and shall return to our inn-not far henceto sup, at eight o'clock. Supper is our principal meal-we rarely spoil our days by the ceremonial of a formal dinner. Will you do us the favour to sup with us?" Our host has a wonderful whisky, which, when raw, is Glenlivat, but, refined into toddy, is nectar. Bring your pipe, and let us hear John Kemble again."

Waife's face lighted up. "You are most kind; nothing I should like so much. But-" and the light fled, the face darkened-"but no; I cannot-you don't knowthat is-I-I have made a vow to myself to decline all such temptations. I humbly begyou'll excuse me."

VANCE.-" Temptations! of what kind-the whisky-toddy?"

WAIFE (puffing away a sigh) .-"Ah, yes; whisky-toddy if you please. Perhaps I once loved a glass too well, and could not resist a glass too much now; and if I once broke the rule, and became a tippler, what would happen to Juliet Araminta? For her sake don't press me."

"Oh do go, Grandy; he never drinks-never anything stronger than tea, I assure you, sir; it can't be that."

"It is, silly child, and nothing else," said Waife, positively; drawing himself up, "Excuse me."

Lionel began brushing his hat -heigh-ho!" with his sleeve, and his face worked: at last he said, " Well, sir, then may by to you.

and I are going to-morrow, after the sitting, to see Hampton Court; we have kept that excursion to the last before leaving these parts. Would Lionel came up to Vance and you and little Sophy come with us in the boat? we will have no whisky-toddy, and we will bring you both safe home."

WAIFE .- " What -I - what I ! You are very young, sir-a gentleman born and bred, I'll swear; and you to be seen, perhaps by some of your friends or family, with an old vagrant like me, in the Queen's palace-the public gardens! I should be the vilest wretch if I took such advantage of your goodness. 'Pretty company,' they would say, 'you had got into.' With me-with me! Don't be alarmed, Mr. Vance-not to be thought of,"

The young men were deeply affected.

"I can't accept that reason," said Lionel, tremulously, "Though I must not presume to derange your habits. But she may go with us, mayn't she? We'll take care of her, and she is dressed so plainly and neatly, and looks such a little lady" (turning to Vance).

"Yes, let her come with us," said the artist benevolently; though he by no means shared in Lionel's enthusiastic desire for her company. He thought she would be greatly in their way. "Heaven bless you both!" answered Waife; "and she wants a holiday; she shall have it."

"I'd rather stay with you. Grandy: you'll be so lone.'

"No, I wish to be out all tomorrow-the investment! I shall not be alone-making friends with our future companion, Sophy."

"And can do without me already?

VANCE .- " So that's settled ; good-

CHAPTER XIII.

Inspiring effect of the Fine Arts: the Vulgar are moved by their exhibition into generous impulses and flights of fancy, checked by the ungracious severities of their superiors, as exemplified in the instance of Cobbler Merle and his Servantof-All-Work.

THE next day, perhaps with the idea | have the Dragon's Head in the of removing all scruple from Sophy's Tenth House, you may count on mind, Waife had already gone after being much talked of after you are his investment when the friends dead." arrived. Sophy at first was dull and dispirited, but by degrees she omen!" said Vance, discomposed, brightened up; and when, the sitting over and the picture done (save such final touches as Vance reserved for solitary study), she was permitted to gaze at her own effigy, she burst into exclamations of frank delight. "Am I like that! is it possible? Oh, how beautiful! Mr. Merle, Mr. Merle, Mr. Merle!" and Lionel." running out of the room before Vance could stop her, she returned to Mr. Merle-" I'd let the gentlewith the Cobbler, followed, too, by man paint me, if he likes it-shall a thin gaunt girl, whom he pom- I tell him, master?" pously called his housekeeper, but that nnsophisticated applause.

Venus very strongly aspected," all your Angles." quoth the Cobbler; "and if you

"After I am dead ! - sinister "I have no faith in artists who count of being talked of after they are dead. Never knew a dauber who did not! But stand backtime flies-tie up your hair-put on your bonnet, Titania. You have a shawl ?-not tinsel, I hope !-quieter the better. You stay and see to her.

Said the gaunt servant-of-all-work

"Go back to the bacon, foolish who, in sober-truth, was servant-of-all-work. Wife he had none— likeness, 'cause of her Benefics! his horoscope, he said, having Saturn But you'd have to give him three in square to the Seventh House, years' wages afore he'd look you forbade him to venture upon ma- straight in the face, 'cause, you see, trimony. All gathered round the picture; all admired, and with jus- added the Cobbler, philosophising, tice-it was a chef d'œuvre. Vance "when the Malefics are dead agin a in his maturest day never painted girl's mug, man is so constituted by more charmingly. The three pounds natur that he can't take to that proved to be the best outlay of capi- mug unless it has a gold handle. tal he had ever made. Pleased with Don't fret, 'tis not your fault : born his work, he was pleased even with under Scorpio-coarse-limbed-dull complexion-and the Head of the "You must have Mercury and Dragon, aspected of Infortunes in

CHAPTER XIV

The Historian takes advantage of the summer hours vouchsafed to the present life of Mr. Waife's grandchild, in order to throw a few gleams of light on her past .-He leads her into the Palace of our Kings, and moralises thereon; and, entering the Royal Gardens, shows the uncertainty of Human Events, and the insecurity of British Laws, by the abrupt seizure and constrained deportation of an innocent and unforeboding Englishman.

capricious English summer was so better than First Love! They enkind that day to the child and her new friends! When Sophy's small foot once trod the sward, had she been really Queen of the Green People, sward and footstep could not more joyously have met together. The grasshopper bounded, in fearless trust, upon the hem of her frock; she threw herself down on the grass, and caught him, but, full. oh, so tenderly; and the gay insect, dear to poet and fairy, seemed to look at her from that quaint sharp the oar. face of his with sagacious recognition, resting calmly on the palm of her pretty hand; then when he sprang off, little mothlike butterflies peculiar to the margins of running waters quivered up from the herbage, fluttering round her. And there, in front, lay the Thames, glittering through the willows, Vance getting ready the boat. Lionel seated by her side, a child like herself, his pride of incipient manhood all forgotten: happy in her glee-she loving him for the joy she felt-and blending his image evermore in her remembrance with her first summer holiday-with sunny beams-glistening leaves-warbling birds-fairy wings-sparkling waves. Oh, to live thought-what was yours?" so in a child's heart - innocent, blessed, angel-like - better, better was not here, that's all." than the troubled reflection upon woman's later thoughts; better than him cordially," said Lionel. that mournful illusion, over which SUCH a glorious afternoon! The tears so bitter are daily shed tered the boat. Sophy had never, to the best of her recollection, been in a boat before. All was new to her: the lifelike speed of the little vessel-that world of cool green weeds, with the fish darting to and fro-the musical chime of oarsthose distant stately swans. She was silent now-her heart was very

> "What are you thinking of, Sophy?" asked Lionel, resting on "Thinking !- I was not thinking," "What then?"

"I don't know-feeling, I suppose."

"Feeling what?"

"As if between sleeping and waking-as the water perhaps feels, with the sunlight on it!"

"Poetical," said Vance, who, somewhat of a poet himself, naturally sneered at poetical tendencies in others. "But not so bad in its way. Ah, have I hurt your vanity? there are tears in your eyes."

"No, sir," said Sophy, falteringly. "But I was thinking then."

"Ah," said the artist, "that's the worst of it; after feeling ever comes

"I was sorry poor grandfather "It was not our fault; we pressed

"You did indeed, sir-thank you!

And I don't know why he refused you." The young men exchanged compassionate glances.

Lionel then sought to make her talk of her past life—tell him more of Mrs. Crane. Who and what was she?

Sophy could not, or would not, tell. The remembrances were painful; she had evidently tried to forget them. And the people with whom Waife had placed her, and who had been kind?

The Misses Burton—and they kept a day-school, and taught Sophy to read, write, and cipher. They lived near London, in a lane opening on a great common, with a green rail before the house, and had a good many pupils, and kept a tortoiseshell cat and a canary. Not much to enlighten her listener did Sophy impart here.

And now they neared that stately palace, rich in associations of storm and splendour. The grand Cardinal -the iron-clad Protector: Dutch William of the immortal memory. whom we try so hard to like and. in spite of the great Whig historian. that Titian of English prose, can only frigidly respect. Hard task for us Britons to like a Dutchman who dethrones his father-in-law, and drinks schnaps. Prejudice certainly; but so it is. Harder still to like Dutch William's unfilial Frau! Like Queen Mary! I could as soon like Queen Goneril! Romance flies from the prosperous phlegmatic Æneas; flies from his plump Lavinia, his "fidus Achates," Bentinck: flies to follow the poor deserted fugitive Stuart, with all his sins upon his head. Kings have no rights divine, except when deposed and fallen: they are then invested with the awe that belongs to each solemn image of mortal vicissitude-Vicissitude that startles the Epicurean, " insanientis sapientiæ consultus," the close.

and strikes from his careless lyre the notes that attest a God! Some proud shadow chases another from the throne of Cyrus, and Horace hears in the thunder the rush of Diespiter, and identifies Providence with the Pertune that snatches off the diaden in her wiltring awon,.* But fronta discrowed take a new majesty to generous natures—in all majesty to generous natures—in all commonplace—in all grand adversity, something roal.

The boat shot to the shore; the young people landed, and entered the arch of the desolate palace. They gazed on the great hall and the presence-chamber, and the long suite of rooms, with faded portraits-Vance as an artist, Lionel as an enthusiastic well-read boy, Sophy as a wondering, bewildered, ignorant child. And then they emerged into the noble garden, with its regal trees. Groups were there of well-dressed persons. Vance heard himself called by name. He had forgotten the London world-forgotten, amidst his msdsummer ramblings, that the London season was still ablaze—and there, stragglers from the great Focus, fine people, with languid tones and artificial jaded smiles. caught him in his wanderer's dress, and walking side by side with the infant wonder of Mr. Rugge's show. exquisitely neat indeed, but still in

^{• &}quot;______Valet inma summis Mutare, et insignem attenuat Deus, Obscura promens; hine apieem rapax Fortuna cum stridore acuto

Sustulit,—hie posuisse gaudet."

To concluding allusion is evidently to the Parthian revolutions, and the changeful fate of Phrastes IV.; and I do not feel sure that the preceding lines upon the phenomenon of the thunder in a series sky here on a latent and half-three phenomenons of the control of the phenomenon of the thunder in the phenomenon of the thunder in the phenomenon of the phe to his observant eyo in the windows our prisoner." of many a shop lavish of tickets, and inviting you to come in by the queens of London; she had with her assurance that it is "selling-off." The artist stopped, coloured, bowed, answered the listless questions put tuft-hunter, but once under social to him with shy haste; he then attempted to escape - they would him, as on most men who are blest not let him.

"You must come back and dine with us at the Star and Garter." said Lady Selina Vipont. "A pleasant party-you know most of them -the Dudley Slowes, dear old Lady Frost, those pretty Ladies Prymme. Janet and Wilhelmina."

"We can't let you off," said, sleepily, Mr. Crampe, a fashionable wit, who rarely made more than one bon-mot in the twenty-four hours, and spent the rest of his time in a torpid state.

VANCE. - "Really you are too kind, but I am not even dressed for-"

LADY SELINA,-" So charmingly dressed-so picturesque! Besides, what matters? Every one knows who you are. Where on earth have you been?"

VANCE.—"Ramblingabout taking sketches."

LADY SELINA (directing her eyeglass towards Lionel and Sophy. who stood aloof) .- " But your companions, your brother?-and that pretty little girl - your sister, I suppose?"

VANCE (shuddering), - No. not relations. I took charge of the boy -clever young fellow; and the little girl is-" LADY SELINA .- "Yes. The little girl is-"

VANCE,-" A little girl, as you see: and very pretty, as you say,-subject for a picture."

LADY SELINA (indifferently) .themselves somewhere. Now we have one now, without fear of disa coloured print, of a pattern familiar have found you-positively you are

Lady Selina Vipont was one of the that habit of command natural to such royalties. Frank Vance was no influences, they had their effect on with noses in the air. Those great ladies, it is true, never bought his pictures, but they gave him the position which induced others to buy them. Vance loved his art: his art needed its career. Its career was certainly brightened and quickened by the help of rank and fashion.

In short, Lady Selina triumphed, and the painter stepped back to Lionel. "I must go to Richmond with these people. I know you'll excuse me. I shall be back to-night somehow. By the by, as you are going to the post-office here for the letter you expect from your mother. ask for my letters too. You will take care of little Sophy, and (in a whisper) hurry her out of the garden, or that Grand Mogul feminine, Lady Selina, whose condescension would crush the Andes, will be stopping heras my protégée, falling in raptures with that horrid coloured print, saying, 'Dear, what pretty sprigs! where can such things be got?' and learning, perhaps, how Frank Vance saved the Bandit's Child from the Remorseless Baron. 'Tis your turn now. Save your friend. The Baron was a lamb compared to a fine lady." He pressed Lionel's unresponding hand, and was off to join the polite merrymaking of the Frosts, Slowes, and Prymmes.

Lionel's pride ran up to the feverheat of its thermometer; - more roused, though, on behalf of the unconscious Sophy than himself.

" Let us come into the town, lady-"Ob, let the children go and amuse bird, and choose a doll. You may tracting you from-what I hate | delightful art to know Mr. Darrell. to think you ever stooped to perform."

As Lionel, his crest erect, and nostril dilated, and holding Sophy firmly by the hand, took his way out from the gardens, he was obliged to pass the patrician party, of whom Vance now made one.

His countenance and air, as he swent by, struck them all, especially Lady Selina, "A very distinguishedlooking boy," said she. "What a fine face! Who did you say he was, Mr. Vance?"

VANCE .- " His name is Haughton

-Lionel Haughton."

LADY SELINA. - " Haughton ! Haughton! Any relation to poor dear Captain Haughton - Charlie Haughton, as he was generally called?"

Vance, knowing little more of his young friend's parentage than that lawyers not much weight in the his mother let lodgings, at which, once domiciliated himself, he had made the boy's acquaintance, and that she enjoyed the pension of a captain's widow, replied carelessly-

"His father was a captain, but I don't know whether he was a Charlie."

MR. CRAMPE (the Wit) .- "Charlies are extinct! I have the last in a fossil,-box and all?"

General laugh. Wit shut up again. LADY SELINA .- "He has a great look of Charlie Haughton. Do you know if he is connected with that extraordinary man, Mr. Darrell?" VANCE .- " Upon my word, I do

What Mr. Darrell do you mean?"

Lady Selina, with one of those sublime looks of celestial pity with which personages in the great world forgive ignorance of names and genealogies in those not born within its orbit, replied, "Oh, to be sure; it is not exactly in the way of your one of the first men in Parliament, a connection of mine."

LADY FROST (nippingly) .- " You mean Guy Darrell, the lawyer."

LADY SELINA .- " Lawyer-true, now I think of it; he was a lawyer. But his chief fame was in the House of Commons. All parties agreed that he might have commanded any station; but he was too rich, perhaps, to care sufficiently about office. At all events, Parliament was dissolved when he was at the height of his reputation, and he refused to be re-elected."

One SIR GREGORY STOLLHEAD (a member of the House of Commons, young, wealthy, a constant attendant, of great promise, with speeches that were filled with facts, and emptied the benches) .- " I have heard of him. Before my time: House now."

LADY SELINA .- "I am told that Mr. Darrell did not speak like a lawyor. But his career is overlives in the country, and sees nobody -a thousand pities-a connection of mine, too-great loss to the country.

Ask your young friend, Mr. Vance. if Mr. Darrell is not his relation. I hope so, for his sake. Now that our party is in power, Mr. Darrell could command anything for others, though he has ceased to act with ns. Our party is not forgetful of talent."

LADY FROST (with icy crispness). -" I should think not; it has so little of that kind to remember." SIR GREGORY .- "Talent is not wanted in the House of Commons now-don't go down, in fact. Business assembly." LADY SELINA (suppressing a yawn) .- "Beautiful day! We had better think of going back to Richmond."

General assent, and slow retreat.

CHAPTER XV.

The Historian records the attachment to public business which distinguishes the British Legislator,-Touching instance of the regret which ever in patriotic bosoms attends the neglect of a public duty.

FROM the dusty height of a rumble- leave a name on his tombstone, can tumble affixed to Lady Selina Vi- say to his own heart, "Perish Stars caught sight of Lionel and Sophy at arbours!" a corner of the spacious green near couple of guineas a-head, including important committee." light wines, which he did not drink, and the expense of a chaise back by on what?" himself. But such are life and its social duties-such, above all, amhi- "Sewers." tion and a career. Who, that would pont's barouche, and by the animated and Garters: my existence shall side of Sir Gregory Stollhead, Vance pass from day to day in honeysuckle Sir Gregory Stollhead interrupted the Palace. He sighed, he envied Vance's reverie by an impassioned them. He thought of the boat, the sneeze-"Dreadful smell of hay!" water, the honeysuckle arbour at said the legislator, with watery eyes. the little inn-pleasures he had "Are you subject to the hay fever? denied himself-pleasures all in his I am! A - tisha - tisha - tisha own way. They seemed still more (sneezing)-country frightfully unalluring by contrast with the pros- wholesome at this time of year. pect before him : formal dinner at And to think that I ought now to the Star and Garter, with titled be in the House-in my committee-Prymmes, Slowes, and Frosts, a room-no smell of hay there-most

VANCE (rousing himself) .- "Ah-

SIE GREGORY (regretfully). -

CHAPTER XVI.

Signs of an impending revolution, which, like all revolutions, seems to come of a sudden, though its causes have long been at work; and to go off in a tantrum, though its effects must run on to the end of a history.

LIONEL could not find in the toy- letters for Vance-one for himself in shops of the village a doll good his mother's handwriting. He deenough to satisfy his liberal inclina- layed opening it for the moment. tions, but he bought one which The day was far advanced-Sophy amply contented the humbler aspira-tions of Sophy. He then strolled to olared she was not. They passed by the post-office. There were several a fruiterer's stall. The strawberries and cherries were temptingly fresh | the turf below, rested his face on his -the sun still very powerful. At hand in agitated thought, Thus ran the back of the fruiterer's was a his mother's letter :small garden, or rather orchard, smiling cool through the open doorlittle tables laid out there. The good woman who kept the shop was accustomed to the wants and tastes of humble metropolitan visitors. But the garden was luckily now emptyit was before the usual hour for teaparties; so the young folks had the pleasantest table under an appletree, and the choice of the freshest fruit. Milk and cakes were added to the fare. It was a hanquet, in Sophy's eyes, worthy that happy day. And when Lionel had finished his share of the feast, eating fast, as spirited, impatient boys formed to push on in life and spoil their digestion are ant to do: and while Sophy was still lingering over the last of the strawberries, he throw himself back on his chair, and drew forth his letter. Lionel was extremely fond of his mother, but her letters were not often those which a boy is over eager to read. It is not all mothers who understand what boys are - their quick susceptibilities, their precocious manliness, all their mystical ways and oddities. A letter from Mrs. Haughton generally somewhat fretted and irritated Lionel's that which stabs me. Mrs. Inman high-strung nerves, and he had instinctively put off the task of reading is the matter?-vou, who are such the one he held, till satisfied hunger and cool-breathing shadows, and rest I could not help saying, "Tis the from the dusty road, had lent their soothing aid to his undeveloped wrote to your benefactor (and I had philosophy.

letter was enclosed within. At the it must be, judging by the few lines first few words his countenance he addressed to me. I don't mind changed; he uttered a slight excla- copying them for you to read. All mation, read on eagerly; then, before my acts are above board-as often concluding his mother's epistle, and often Captain H. used to say, hastily tore open that which it had 'Your heart is in a glass case, contained, ran his eye over its con- Jessica;' and so it is! but my son tents, and, dropping both letters on keeps his under lock and key.

"MY DEAR BOY, "How could you! Do it slyly!! Unknown to your own mother !!! I could not believe it of you!!!! Take advantage of my confidence in showing you the letters of your father's cousin, to write to himselfclandestinely !- you, who I thought had such an open character, and who ought to appreciate mine. Every one who knows me says I am a woman in ten thousand-not for beauty and talent (though I have had my admirers for them too), but for GOODNESS! As a wife and mother, I may say I have been exemplary. I had sore trials with the dear oaptain-and IMMENSE temptations. But he said on his deathbed, 'Jessica, you are an angel.' And I have had offers since-IMMENSE offers-but I devoted myself to my child, as you know. And what I have put up with, letting the first floor, nobody can tell; and only a widow's pension - going before a magistrate to get it paid! And to think my own child, for whom I have borne so much, should behave so cruelly to me! Clandestine! 'tis found me crying, and said, 'What an angel, crying like a haby !' And serpent's tooth, Mrs. I.' What you hoped patron) I don't care to guess; He broke the seal slowly; another something very rude and imprudent to me), 'your son has thought fit to stances, I might have written a letter infringe the condition upon which I agreed to assist you on his hehalf, I enclose a reply to himself, which I beg you will give to his own hands without breaking the seal. Since it did not seem to you indiscreet to communicate to a boy of his years letters written solely to yourself, you cannot blame me if I take your implied estimate of his capacity to judge for himself of the nature of a correspondence, and of the views and temper of, madam, your very obedient servant.' And that's all, to me. I send his letter to youseal unbroken. I conclude he has done with you for ever, and your CAREER is lost ! But if it be so, oh. my poor, poor child ! at that thought I have not the heart to scold you farther. If it be so, come home to me, and I'll work and slave for you. and you shall keep up your head and be a gentleman still, as you are. every inch of you. Don't mind what I've said at the heginning, dear-don't! you know I'm hasty. and I was hurt. But you could not mean to be sly and nnderhand-'twas only your high spirit-and it was my fault; I should not have shown you the letters. I hope you are well, and have quite lost that nasty cough, and that Mr. Vance treats you with proper respect. I think him rather too pushing and familiar, though a pleasant young man on the whole. But, after all, he is only a painter. Bless you, my child, and don't have secrets again from your poor mother.

"JESSICA HAUGHTON."

The enclosed letter was as follows:-

"LIONEL HAUGHTON, - Some men might be displeased at receiv-

"'Madam' (this is what he writes | years, and under the same circummuch in the same spirit. Relieve your mind-as yet you owe me no obligations; you have only received back a debt due to you. My father was poor; your grandfather, Robert Haughton, assisted him in the cost of my education. I have assisted your father's son; we are quits, Before, however, we decide on having done with each other for the future, I suggest to you to pay me a short visit. Probably I shall not like you, nor you me. But we are both gentlemen, and need not show dislike too coarsely. If you decide on coming, come at once, or possibly you may not find me here. If you refuse, I shall have a poor opinion of your sense and temper, and in a week I shall have forgotten your existence. I ought to add that your father and I were once warm friends. and that by descent I am the head not only of my own race, which ends with me, but of the Haughton family, of which, though your line assumed the name, it was hut a younger branch. Nowadays young men are probably not brought up to care for these things-I was .-Yours.

"GUY HAUGHTON DARRELL," " Manor House, Fawley."

Sophy picked up the fallen letters. placed them on Lionel's lan, and looked into his face wistfully. He smiled, resumed his mother's epistle. and read the concluding passages. which he had before omitted. Their sudden turn from reproof to tenderness melted him. He began to feel that his mother had a right to blame him for an act of concealment. Still she never would have consented to his writing such a ing such a letter as you have ad- letter; and had that letter heen dressed to me; I am not. At your attended with so ill a result? Again he read Mr. Darrell's blunt but ing creek, and by the honcysuckle soothed-why should he not now ing on his stick. love his father's friend? He rose briskly, paid for the fruit, and went they landed, and Sophy sprang into his way back to the boat with Sophy. As his oars cut the wave he talked gaily, but he ceased to interrogate you. You have not caught cold, Sophy on her past. Energetic, sanguine, ambitious, his own future entered now into his thoughts. Still. when the sun sunk as the inn came | children. Pray, come into the inn, partially into view from the winding | of the banks and the fringe of the witlows, his mind again settled on the patient quiet little girl, who had sir; I wish to get home at once, not ventured to ask him one question in return for all he had put so unceremoniously to her. Indeed, she was silently musing over words he had inconsiderately let fall -"What I hate to think you had ever stooped to perform." Little could Lionel guess the unquiet thoughts which those words might hereafter call forth from the brooding deepening meditations of lonely childhood! At length said the boy abruptly, as he had said once be-

"I wish, Sophy, you were my sister." He added in a saddened tone, "I never had a sister-I have so longed for one! However, surely we shall meet again. You go tomorrow-so must I."

Sophy's tears flowed softly, noiselessly.

"Cheer up, ladybird, I wish you liked me half as much as I like vou!"

"I do like you-oh, so much!" cried Sophy, passionately. "Well, then, you can write, you say?"

fore-

"A little." "You shall write to me now and then, and I to you. I'll talk to your grandfather about it. Ah, there he is, surely !"

not offensive lines. His pride was arbour stood Gentleman Waife lean-

"You are late," said the actor, as his arms. "I began to be uneasy, and came here to inquire after child?"

SOPHY .- "Oh. no."

LIONEL .- "Sho is the best of Mr. Waife; no toddy, but some refreshment."

WAIFE. - "I thank you - no. I walk slowly: it will be dark soon."

Lionel tried in vain to detain him. There was a certain change in Mr. Waife's manner to him; it was much more distant-it was even pettish, if not surly. Lionel could not account for it-thought it mere whim at first, but as he walked part of the way back with thom towards the village, this asperity continued, nay increased. Lionel was hurt; he arrested his steps.

"I see you wish to have your grandchild to yourself now. May I call early to-morrow? Sophy will tell you that I hope we may not altogether lose sight of each other. I will give you my address when I call."

"What time to-morrow, sir?" " About nine."

Waife bowed his head and walked on, but Sophy looked back towards her boy friend, sorrowfully, gratefully-twilight in the skies that had been so sunny-twilight in her face that had been so glad! She looked back once, twice, thrice, as Lionel halted on the road and kissed his hand. The third time Waife said, with unwonted crossness-

"Enough of that, Soply; looking after young men is not proper! The boat now ran into the shelv- What does he mean about 'seeing each other, and giving me his ad- dotage, and he had not hitherto dress ? ""

"He wished me to write to him sometimes, and he would write to me."

Waife's brow contracted; but if, in the excess of grandfatherly caution, he could have supposed that the bright-hearted boy of seventeen meditated ulterior ill to that fairy child in such a scheme for corres- are not too many! pondence, he must have been in his evinced any signs of that.

Farewell, pretty Sophy! the evening star shines upon you elu-tree that hides thee from view. Fading -fading grows the summer landscape; faded already from the landscape thy gentle image! So ends a holiday in life. Hallow it, Sophy; hallow it, Lionel! Life's holidays

CHAPTER XVII.

By this chapter it appeareth that he who sets out on a career can scarcely expect to walk in perfect comfort, if he exchange his own thick-soled shoes for dress-boots which were made for another man's measure, and that the said boots may not the less pinch for being brilliantly varnished .- It also showeth, for the instruction of Men and States, the connection between democratic opinion and wounded selflove; so that, if some Liberal statesman desire to rouse against an aristocracy the class just below it, he has only to persuade a fine lady to be exceedingly civil "to that sort of people,"

VANCE, returning late at night, found on your mind," said Vance, who had his friend still up in the little par- now finished reading his letters, lour, the windows open, pacing the lighted his oigar, and was leaning floor with restless strides, stopping against the window as the boy connow and then to look at the moon upon the river.

"Such a day as I have had! and twelve shillings for the fly, 'pikes not included," said Vance, much out of humour-

" 'I fly from plate, I fly from pomp,

I fly from falsehood's specions grin; I forget the third line; I know the last is-' To find my welcome at an inn.' You are silent: I annoyed you by going-could not help it-pity me. and lock up your pride." "No, my dear Vance, I was hurt for a moment-but that's long since over ! "

"Still you seem to have something tinued to walk to and fro.

"That is true-I have. I should like your advice. Read that letter. Ought I to go?-Would it look mercenary-grasping? You know what I mean." Vance approached the candles and took the letter. He glanced first at the signature. "Darrell." he exclaimed. "Oh, it is so, then !" He read with great attention, put down the letter, and shook Lionel by the hand. "I congratulate you: all is settled as it should be. Go? of course-you would be an illmannered lout if you did not. Is it far from hence-must you return to town first?"

LIONEL,-" No! I find I can get across the country-two hours by even to Sir Gregory Stollbead? No. the railway. There is a station at I am the painter Frank Vancethe town which bears the post-mark nothing more nor less; and if I of the letter. I shall make for that, stood on my head in a check shirt if you advise it."

you would not have tortured your mur, 'Only Frank Vance the intellect by those researches into painter - what does it signify?" Bradshaw."

laughing; "but I wished for your sanction of my crude impressions."

name was Darrell - not that I should have been much wiser if you had, but, thunder and lightning, Lionel, do von know that your cousin Darrell is a famous man?" LIONEL .- " Famous !- Nonsense.

I suppose he was a good lawver, for I have heard my mother say, with a sort of contempt, that he had made a great fortune at the bar!"

VANCE.- "But he was in Parliament."

know."

fame! You never heard your schoolfellows talk of Mr. Darrell? name if you had boasted of it." LIONEL.—" Certainly not."

VANCE .- " Would your schoolfellows have known the names of Wilkie, of Landseer, of Turner, Maclise-I speak of Painters!" LIONEL .- "I should think so, indeed."

VANCE (soliloquising). - " And yet Her Serene Sublimityship, Lady Selina Vivont, says to me with melting on the palate like ice. All divine compassion, 'Not in the way of your delightful art to know such are quarrelsome and democratic. men as Mr. Darrell!' Oh, as if I did not see through it too when she I am sure, could have meant to call said, apropos of my jean cap and you a tuft-hunter-of course, every velveteen jacket, 'What matters one knows that a great painter-" said that to the Earl of Dunder, or individuals trace their pedigree from and a sky-coloured apron, Lady "You knew I should advise it, or Selina Vipont would kindly mur-Aha!-and they think to put me to "Shrewdly said," answered Lionel, use !- puppets and lay figures !- it is I who put them to use! Harkye, Lionel, you are nearer akin to these "You never told me your cousin's fine folks than I knew of. Promise me one thing: you may become of their set, by right of your famous Mr. Darrell; if ever you hear an artist, musician, scribbler, no matter what, ridiculed as a tuft-hunterseeking the great-and so forthbefore you join in the laugh, ask some great man's son, with a pedigree that dates from the Ark. 'Are you not a toad-eater too! Do you want political influence?-do you stand contested elections ?-do you LIONEL .- "Was he? I did not curry and fawn upon greasy Sam the butcher and grimy Tom the VANCE.- "And this is senatorial blacksmith for a vote? Why? useful to your career-necessary to your ambition? Aba! is it meaner -they would not have known his to curry and fawn upon whitehanded women and elegant coxcombs? Tut, tut! useful to a career -necessary to ambition." Vance paused, out of breath. The spoiled darling of the circles-he-to talk such republican rubbish! Certainly he must have taken his two guineas' worth out of those light wines. Nothing so treacherous! they inflame the brain like fire, while inhabitants of light-wine countries LIONEL (astounded),-" No one, how you dress? Every one knows WANCE.—"Dates from Michael who you are!' Would she have Angelo, if not from Zeuxis! Common Art from Art's founders!"

Oh Vance, Vance, you are certainly drunk! If that comes from dining with fine people at the Star and Garter, you would be a happier man and as good a painter if your toddy were never sipped save in honeysuckle arbours.

"But," said Lionel, bewildered, and striving to turn his friend's thoughts, " what has all this to do with Mr. Darrell ?"

VANCE. - " Mr. Darrell might have been one of the first men in the kingdom. Lady Selina Vipont says so, and she is related, I believe, if so, she may not be in the same to every member in the Cabinet. Mr. Darrell can push you in life, and make your fortune, without any great trouble on your own part. Bless your stars, and rejoice that you ably rude?" are not a painter !"

Lionel flung his arm round the delightful set. Lady Selina Vipont artist's broad breast. "Vance, you is excruciatingly-civil. are cruel!" It was his turn to their own fathers !- the children of console the painter, as the painter had three nights before (apropos of the same Mr. Darrell) consoled him. Vance gradually sobered down, and the young men walked forth in the moonlight. And the eternal stars had the same kind looks for Vance as they had vouchsafed to Lionel.

"When do you start?" asked the painter, as they mounted the stairs to hed.

"To morrow evening. I miss the early train, for I must call first and take leave of Sophy. I hope I may see her again in after-life." "And I hope, for your sake, that coloured print, with Lady Selina Vipont's eveglass upon her!"

"What!" said Lionel, laughing: "is Lady Selina Vipont so formid-

"Rude! nobody is rude in that

CHAPTER XVIII.

Being devoted exclusively to a reflection, not inapposite to the events in this history, nor to those in any other which chronicles the life of man.

THERE is one warning lesson in stronger or weaker, is snapped asun-life which few of us have not re- der in every parting, and Time's ceived, and no book that I can call busy fingers are not practised in to memory has noted down with re-splicing broken ties. Meet again an adequate emphasis. It is this: you may; will it be in the same "Beware of parting!" The true way?-with the same sympathies? sadness is not in the pain of the -with the same sentiments? Will parting, it is in the When and the the souls, hurrying on in diverse How you are to meet again with the paths, unite once more, as if the · face about to vanish from your view! interval had been a dream? Rarely, From the passionate farewell to the rarely! Have you not, after even woman who has your heart in her a year, even a month's absence, keeping, to the cordial good-by ex- returned to the same place, found changed with pleasant companions the same groups reassembled, and at a watering-place, a country-house, yet sighed to yourself,-" But where or the close of a festive day's blythe is the charm that once breathed and careless excursion - a cord, from the spot, and once smiled from the faces ?" A poet has said, "Eter- applied to it the same, still, the air nity itself cannot restore the loss that thou seest not, the air to thy struck from the minute." Are you ear gives the music. happy in the spot on which you tarry with the persons, whose voices hausted receiver, thou wilt scarce are now melodious to your ear?- hear the sound; give the bell due beware of parting; or, if part you vibration by free air in warm daymust, say not in insolent defiance to light, or sink it down to the heart Time and Destiny, "What matters!

the lips which murmured, "Soon soul, checks thy footstep,-unto deep meet again," and remember how, in calls the deep, -a voice from the heart, soul, and thought, we stood ocean is borne to thy soul. for ever divided the one from the other, when, once more face to face. again!"

-we shall soon meet again."

Ring a bell underneath an exof the ocean, where the air, all compressed, fills the vessel around it,* Alas, and alas! when we think of and the chime, heard afar, starts thy Where, then, the change, when thou sayest. " Lo, the same metalwe each inly exclaimed, - "Met why so faint-heard the ringing?" Ask the air that thou seest not, or The air that we breathe makes the above thee in sky, or below thee in medium through which sound is ocean. Art thou sure that the bell, conveyed; be the instrument un- so faint-heard, is not struck underchanged, be the force which is neath an exhausted receiver?

CHAPTER XIX.

The wandering inclinations of Nomad Tribes not to be accounted for on the principles of action peculiar to civilised men, who are accustomed to live in good houses and able to pay the income-tax,-When the money that once belonged to a man civilised, vanishes into the pockets of a nomad, neither lawful art nor occult science can, with certainty, discover what he will do with it,-Mr. Vance narrowly escapes well-merited punishment from the nails of the British Fair.-Lionel Haughton, in the temerity of youth, braves the dangers of a British Railway.

THE morning was dull and overcast, rain gathering in the air, when Vance and Lionel walked to Waife's lodging. As Lionel placed his hand repair of a ploughman's boot. on the knocker of the private door, the Cobbler, at his place by the window in the stall beside, glanced towards him, and shook his head.

"No use knocking, gentlemen. Will you kindly step in ?-this way."

"Do you mean that your lodgers are out?" asked Vance.

"Gone!" said the Cobbler, thrusting his awl with great vehemence through the leather destined to the "Gone-for good !" cried Lionel;

"you cannot mean it. I call by appointment."

"Sorry, sir, for your trouble. Stop

* The bell in a sunk diving-bell, where the air is compressed, sounds with increased power. Sound travels four times quicker in water than in the upper air. E a bit : I have a letter here for you." And out of his miscellaneous recep-The Cobbler dived into a drawer, and from a medley of nails and thongs drew forth a letter addressed to L. Haughton, Esq.

"Is this from Waife? How on earth did he know my surname? you never mentioned it, Vance?" " Not that I remember. But you aid you found him at the inn, and they knew it there. It is on the brass-plate of your knapsack. No matter,-what does he say?" and Vance looked over his friend's shoulder and read :-

"SIR,-I most respectfully thank you for your condescending kindness to me and my grandchild; and your friend, for his timely and generous aid. You will pardon me, that the necessity which knows no law obliges me to leave this place some hours before the time of your proposed visit. My grandchild says you intended to ask her sometimes to write to you. Excuse me. sir: on reflection, you will perceive how different your ways of life are from those which she must tread with me. You see before you a man who--but, I forget, you see him no more, and probably never will .- Your most humble and most obliged obedient " W. W." servant.

VANCE .- "Who never more may trouble you! Where have they gone?" COBBLER .- "Don't know; would you like to take a peep in the crystal -perhaps you've the gift, unbeknown?"

VANCE .- " Not I -- Bah! Come away, Lionel."

"Did not Sophy even leave any message for me?" asked the boy. sorrowfully.

"To be sure she did; I forgotno, not exactly a message, but this- her wherever she goes!" I was to be sure to give it to you." VANCE .- " Don't you think Waife tacle the Cobbler extracted a little book. Vance looked and laughed-"The Butterflies' Ball and the Grasshoppers' Feast,"

Lionel did not share the laugh. He plucked the book to himself, and read on the fly-leaf, in a child's irregular scrawl, blistered too with the unmistakable trace of fallen tears. these words :--

"Do not Scorn it. I have nothing else I can think of which is All Mine. Miss Jane Burton gave it me for being Goode. Grandfather says you are too high for us, and that I shall not see you More; but I shall never forget how kind you were,-never-never.-Sophy.

Said the Cobbler, his awl upright in the hand which rested on his knee,-"What a plague did the Stronomers discover Herschell for ? You see, sir," addressing Vance, "things odd and strange all come along o' Herschell,"

" What !- Sir John ?"

" No, the star he poked out. He's a awful star for females! hates 'em like poison! I suspect he's been worriting hisself into her nativity. for I got out from her the year, month, and day she was born, hour unbeknown, but, calkelating by noon, Herschell was dead agin her in the Third and Ninth House,-Voyages, Travels, Letters, News, Church Matters, and suchlike. But it will all come right after he's transited. Her Jupiter must be good. But I only hope," added the Cobbler, selemnly, "that they won't go a-discovering any more stars. The world did a deal better without the new one, and they do talk of a Neptune -as bad as Saturn !"

"And this is the last of her!" said Lionel, sadly, putting the book into his breast-pocket. "Heaven shield and the poor little girl will come by the jacket, and a third, with a back again ?"

COBBLER.-P'raps; I know he was looking hard into the county map at the stationer's over the way: that seems as if he did not mean to go very far. P'raps he may come back." VANCE .- "Did he take all his goods with him?"

COBBLER,-" Barrin' an old boxnothing in it, I expect, but theatre rubbish-play-books, paints, an old He has good wig, and sichlike. clothes-always had; and so has she, but they don't make more than a bundle.

VANCE .- "But surely you must know what the old fellow's project is. He has got from me a great sum -what will be do with it?"

COBBLER,-"Just what has been a-bothering me. What will he do with it? I cast a figure to knowcould not make it out. Strange signs in Twelfth House. Enemies and Big Animals. Well, well, he's a marbellous man, and if he warn't a misbeliever in the crystal, I should say he was under Herschell; for you see, sir" (laying hold of Vance's button, as he saw that gentleman turning to escape)-"yon see Herschell, though he be a sinister chap eno', specially in affairs connected with t'other sex, disposes the native to dive into the mysteries of natur. I'm a Herschell man, out and outer! Born in March, and-"

"As mad as its hares," muttered Vance, wrenching his button from the Cobbler's grasp, and impatiently striding off. But he did not effect his escape so easily, for, close at hand, just at the corner of the lane. a female group, headed by Merle's gaunt housekeeper, had been silently collecting from the moment the two friends had paused at the Cobbler's door. And this petticoated divan suddenly closing round the painter, one pulled him by the sleeve, another | their doors. Stray dogs, excited by nose upon which somebody had sat in early infanoy, whispered, "Please, sir, take my picter fust." Vance stared aghast-"Your picture, you drab!" Here another model of rustic charms, who might have furnished an ideal for the fat scullion in Tristram Shandy, bobbing a curtsy, put in her rival claim.

"Sir, if you don't objex to coming in to the kitching, after the family has gone to bed. I don't care if I lets you make a minnytur of me for two pounds." " Miniature of you, porpoise ! "

"Polly, sir, not Porpus-ax pardon. I shall clean myself, and I have a butyful new cap-Honeytun. and-"

"Let the gentleman go, will you?" said a third; "I am surprised at ve. Polly. The kitching unbeknown! Sir, I'm in the nussary-yes, sirand missus says you may take me any time, purvided you'll take the babby, in the back parlour-yes, sir. Number 5 in the High Street. Mrs. Spratt,-yes, sir. Babby has had the smallpox-in case you're a married gentleman with a family-quite safe there-yes, sir."

Vance could endnre no more, and, forgetful of that gallantry which should never desert the male sex, burst through the phalanx with an anathema, blackening alike the beauty and the virtne of those on whom it fell-that would have justified a cry of shame from every manly bosom, and which at once changed into shrill wrath the supplicatory tones with which he had been hitherto addressed. Down the street he hurried, and down the street followed the insulted fair. "Hiss-hiss-no gentleman, no gentleman! Aha-skulk off-do-low blaggurd!" shricked Polly. From their counters shop-folks rushed to fugitive man, velving "in madding bray!" Vance, fearing to be clawed by the females if he merely walked, sure to be bitten by the dogs if he of the bill, have you enough left for ran, ambled on, strove to look composed, and carry his nose high in its native air, till, clearing the street, he saw a hedgerow to the right-leapt it with an agility which no stimulus less preternatural than that of selfpreservation could have given to his limbs, and then shot off like an arrow, and did not stop, till, out of breath, he dropt upon the bench in the sheltering honeysuckle arbour, Here he was still fanning himself with his cap, and muttering unmentionable expletives, when he was joined by Lionel, who had tarried behind to talk more about Sophy to the Cobbler, and who, unconscious that the din which smote his ear was caused by his ill-starred friend. had been enticed to go up-stairs and look after Sophy in the crystalvainly. When Vance had recited his misadventures, and Lionel had sufficiently condoled with him, it became time for the latter to pay his share of the bill, pack up his knapsack, and start for the train. Now, the station could only be reached by penetrating the heart of the village, and Vance swore that he had had enough of that, "Peste!" said he: "I should pass right before No. 5 in the High Street, and the nuss and the babby will be there on the threshold, like Virgil's picture of the infernal regions-

*Infantumque anime flentes in limine primo.

neighbourhood. In a few days I Pimlico? Truth to say, as he strode the clamour, ran wildly after the | shall be in town; write to me there, and tell me how you get on. Shake hands, and Heaven speed you. But, ah! now you have paid your moiety the train?"

"Oh, yes, the fare is but a few shillings; but, to be sure, a fly to Fawley? I ought not to go on foot" (proudly); "and, too, supposing he affronts me, and I have to leave his house suddenly? May I borrow a sovereign? my mother will call and repay it."

VANCE (magnificently).- "There it is, and not much more left in my purse-that cursed Star and Garter! and those three pounds!"

LIONEL (sighing) .- "Which were so well spent! Before you sell that picture, do let me make a copy."

VANCE .- " Better take a model of your own. Village full of them: you could bargain with a porpoise for half the money which I was duped into squandering away on a chit! But don't look so grave: you may copy me if you can!"

"Time to start, and must walk brisk, sir," said the jolly landlord. looking in.

"Good-by, good-by,"

And so departed Lionel Haughton upon an emprise as momentous to that youth-errant as Perilous Bridge or Dragon's Cave could have been to knighterrant of old."

" Before we decide on having done with each other, a short visit"-so ran the challenge from him who had everything to give unto him who had everything to gain. And how did Lionel Haughton, the ambitious and aspiring, contemplate the ven-We will take leave of each other ture in which success would admit here. I shall go by the boat to him within the gates of the golden Chertsey whenever I shall have Carduel an equal in the lists with sufficiently recovered my shaken the sons of paladins, or throw him nerves. There are one or two pic- back to the arms of the widow who turesque spots to be seen in that let a first floor in the back streets of musingly towards the station for of man." Therefore taking into starting, where the smoke-cloud now account the poor cousin's vigilant curled from the wheel-track of iron, pride on the qui vive for offence, and -truth to say, the anxious doubt the rich cousin's temper (as judged which disturbed him was not that by his letters) rude enough to prewhich his friends might have felt on sent it, we must own that if Lionel his behalf. In words, it would have Haughton has at this moment what shaped itself thus—"Where is that is commonly called "a chance," the poor little Sophy! and what will question as yet is not, what is that become of her-what?" But when, chance, but what will he do with it? launched on the journey, hurried on And as the reader advances in this to its goal, the thought of the ordeal history, he will acknowledge that before him forced itself on his mind, there are few questions in this world he muttered inly to himself-"Done so frequently agitated, to which the with each other; let it be as he solution is more important to each pleases, so that I do not fawn on his puzzled mortal, than that upon pleasure. Better a million times which starts every sage's discovery, enter life as a penniless gentleman, every novelist's plot - that which who must work his way up like a applies to MAN'S LIFE, from its first man, than as one who creeps on his sleep in the cradle, "WHAT WILL knees into fortune, shaming birth- HE DO WITH IT?" right of gentleman, or soiling honour

BOOK II .- CHAPTER I.

Primitive character of the country in certain districts of Great Britain,-Connection between the features of surrounding scenery and the mental and moral inclinations of man, after the fashion of all sound Ethnological Historians,-A charioteer, to whom an experience of British Laws suggests an ingenious mode of arresting the progress of Roman Papacy, carries Lionel Haughton and his fortunes to a place which allows of description and invites repose.

ridges of undulating green. In leaden sky. such an England, Knights Templars | Lionel touched the driver-" Are might have wended their way to we yet on Mr. Darrell's property?" scattered monasteries, or fugitive Of the extent of that property he partisans in the bloody Wars of the had involuntarily conceived a vast Roses have found shelter under idea. leafy coverts.

In safety, but with naught else rare | cultivated and imaginative gazer enough, in a railway train, to deserve far back from the present daycommemoration, Lionel reached the waking up long-forgotten passages station to which he was bound. He from old poets. The stillness of there inquired the distance to Faw- such wastes of sward-such deeps ley Manor House; it was five miles. of woodland-induced the nurture He ordered a fly, and was soon of reverie, gravely soft and lulling. wheeled briskly along a rough There, Ambition might give rest to parish-road, through a country the wheel of Ixion, Avarice to the strongly contrasting the gay River sieve of the Danaïds; there, disap-Scenery he had so lately quitted. pointed Love might muse on the Quite as English, but rather the brevity of all human passions, and England of a former race than count over the tortured hearts that that which spreads round our own have found peace in holy meditageneration like one vast suburb of tion, or are now stilled under grassy garden-ground and villas - Here, knolls. See where, at the crossing nor village, nor spire, nor porter's of three roads upon the waste, the lodge came in sight. Rare even landscape suddenly unfolds—an up-were the cornfields—wide spaces of land in the distance, and on the unenclosed common opened, soli- upland a building, the first sign of tary and primitive, on the road, social man. What is the building? bordered by large woods, chiefly of only a silenced windmill-the sails beech, closing the horizon with dark and sharp against the dull

"Lord, sir, no; we be two miles The scene had its romance, its from Squire Darrell's. He han't beauty-half savage, half gentle- much property to speak of hereleading perforce the mind of any abouts. But he bought a good bit

o' land, too, some years ago, ten or house in sight. At its rear lay a First time you are going to Fawley, sir ?"

"Yes."

"Ah! I don't mind seeing you afore-and I should have known you if I had, for it is seldom indeed I have a fare to Fawley old Manor House. It must be, I take it, four or five year ago sin' I wor there with a gent, and he went away while I wor feeding the horse-did me out o' my back fare. What bisness had he to walk when he came in my fly ?-Shabby."

"Mr. Darrell lives very retired. then-sees few persons?"

I knows on : see'd two o' his hosses though-rare good uns;" and the driver whipped on his own horse, took to whistling, and Lionel asked no more. At length the chaise stopped at a carriage gate, receding from the road, and deeply shadowed by venerable trees-no lodge. The driver. dismounting, opened the gate.

" Is this the place?"

The driver nodded assent, remounted, and drove on rapidly through what might, by courtesy, twelve mile'tother side o'the county. piece of water, scarcely large enough to be styled a lake-too winding in its shaggy banks-its ends too concealed by tree and islet, to be called by the dull name of pond. Such as it was, it arrested the eye before the gaze turned towards the house-it. had an air of tranquillity so sequestered, so solemn. A lively man of the world would have been seized with spleen at the first glimpse of it, But he who had known some great grief-some anxious care-would have drunk the calm into his weary soul like an anodyne. The housesmall, low, ancient, about the date of Edward VI., before the statelier "'Spose so. I never see'd him as architecture of Elizabeth. houses in England so old, indeed, as Fawley Manor House. A vast weight of roof, with high gableswindows on the upper story projecting far over the lower part-a covered porch with a coat of halfobliterated arms deep panelled over the oak door. Nothing grand vet all how venerable! But what is this? Close beside the old, quiet, unassuming Manor House rises the skeleton of a superb and costly pile -a palace uncompleted, and the work evidently suspended-perhaps be called a park. The enclosure long since, perhaps now for everwas indeed little beyond that of a No busy workmen nor animated good-sized paddock-its boundaries scaffolding. The perforated battlewere visible on every side-but ments roofed over with visible haste swelling uplands, covered with massy | -here with slate, there with tile; foliage sloped down to its wild, irre- the Elizabethan mullion casements gular turf soil-soil poor for pas- unglazed; some roughly boarded turage, but pleasant to the eye; across-some with staring forlorn with dell and dingle, bosks of fan apertures, that showed floorless tastic pollards-dotted caks of vast chambers-for winds to whistle growth-here and there a weird through and rats to tenant. Weeds hollow thorn-tree-patches of fern and long grass were growing over and gorse. Hoarse and loud cawed blocks of stone that lay at hand. A the rooks-and deep, deep as from wallflower had forced itself into root the innermost core of the lovely on the sill of a giant oriel. The woodlands, came the mellow note of effect was startling. A fabric which the cuckoo. A few moments more he who conceived it must have a wind of the road brought the founded for posterity-so solid its masonry, so thick its walls-and thus abruptly left to moulder-a of the Papacy, when an elderly sernalace constructed for the reception of crowding guests-the pomp of stately revels-abandoned to owl and bat. And the homely old house beside it, which that lordly hall was doubtless designed to replace, looking so safe and tranquil at the baffled of Mr. Darrell's invitation-that he presumption of its spectral neighbour.

The driver had rung the bell, and now turning back to the chaise, met Lionel's inquiring eye, and said-"Yes: Squire Darrell began to build that-many years ago-when I was a boy. I heerd say it was to be the show-house of the whole county. Been stopped these ten or a dozen vears."

"Why?-do you know?"

"No one knows. Squire was a larver, I b'leve-perhaps he put it into Chancery. My wife's grandfather was put into Chancery jist as he was growing up, and never grew afterwards-never got out o' itnout ever does. There's our churchwarden comes to me with a petition to sign agin the Pope. Says I, 'that purse in his hand, said, "Allow me old Pope is always in trouble-what's to save you that trouble, sir. Driver, he bin doin now?' Says he, 'Spreadhim.' Says I, 'Put the Pope into "If you will wait here a moment, Chancery, along with wife's grand-sir, I will see for my master." father, and he'll never spread agin."

The driver had thus just disposed vant, out of livery, opened the door. Lionel sprung from the chaise, and paused in some confusion-for then. for the first time, there darted across him the idea that he had never written to announce his acceptance ought to have done so-that he might not be expected. Meanwhile the servant surveyed him with some surprise. "Mr. Darrell?" hesitated Lionel, inquiringly.

"Not at home, sir," replied the man, as if Lionel's business was over, and he had only to re-enter his chaise. The boy was naturally rather bold than shy, and he said. with a certain assured air, "My name is Haughton. I come here on Mr. Darrell's invitation."

The servant's face changed in a moment-he bowed respectfully, "I beg pardon, sir. I will look for my master-he is somewhere on the grounds." The servant then approached the fly, took out the knapsack, and observing Lionel had his round to the stable-yard." Stepping ing! He's agot into Parlyment, and back into the house, the servant he's now got a colledge, and we pays threw open a door to the left, on I doesn't know how to stop entrance, and advanced a chair-

CHAPTER II.

Guy Darrell-and Still'd Life.

found himself was singularly quaint. a marvellously ugly sideboard to An antiquarian or architect would match, and on it a couple of black have discovered at a glance that, at shagreen cases, the lids of which some period, it had formed part of were flung open, and discovered the entrance-hall; and when, in the pistol-shaped handles of silver Elizabeth's or James the First's knives. The mantelpiece reached day, the refinement in manners to the ceiling, in panelled compartbegan to penetrate from baronial ments, with heraldio shields, and mansions to the homes of the supported by rude stone Caryatides. gentry, and the entrance-hall ceased | On the walls were several pictures to be the common refectory of the |-family portraits, for the names owner and his dependants, this were inscribed on the frames. They spartment had been screened off varied in date from the reign of by perforated panels, which, for the Elizabeth to that of George I. sake of warmth and comfort, had A strong family likeness pervaded been filled up into solid wainscot them all-high features, dark hair, by a succeeding generation. Thus grave aspects-save indeed one, a one side of the room was richly Sir Ralph Haughton Darrell, in a carved with geometrical designs and dress that spoke him of the holiday arahesque pilasters, while the other | date of Charles II .- all knots, lace. three sides were in small simple and ribbons; evidently the beau of panels, with a deep fantastic frieze the race; and he had blue eyes, a in plaster, depicting a deer-chase in blonde peruke, a careless profligate relief, and running between woodwork and ceiling. The ceiling itself | devil-me-care, rakehelly, handsome, was relieved by long pendants, without any apparent meaning, and drawer, beat a watchman, charmed by the crest of the Darrells, a heron, wreathed round with the family motto, " Ardua petit Ardea," It was a dining-room, as was shown by the character of the furniture. But there was no attempt on the part of the present owner, and there had clearly been none on the part of his predecessor, to suit the furniture to the room. The furniture, indeed, was of the heavy graceless taste of George the First figure, that Lionel, on turning -cumbrous chairs in walnut-tree- quickly, might have mistaken him with a worm-eaten mosaic of the for a portrait brought into bold

THE room in which Lionel now faded blue worsted on their seatssmile, and looked altogether as good-for-nought, as ever swore at a a lady, terrified a husband, and hummed a song as he pinked his man.

Lionel was still gazing upon the effigies of this airy cavalier, when the door behind him opened very noiselessly, and a man of imposing presence stood on the thresholdstood so still, and the carved mouldings of the doorway so shadowed, and, as it were, cased round his heron on their homely backs, and a relief, from its frame, by a sudden fall of light. We hear it, indeed, | quietly, "All hours are the same to like an old picture. Never could it be more appositely said than of the gazed, much startled and somewhat awed. Not such as inferior limners had painted in the portraits there, though it had something in common with those family lineaments, but such as might have looked tranquil power out of the canvass of Titian.

The man stepped forward, and the illusion passed. "I thank you," he said, holding out his hand, " for taking me at my word, and answering me thus in person." He paused a moment, surveying Lionel's countenance with a keen but not unkindly eye, and added softly, " Very like your father."

At these words Lionel involuntarily pressed the hand which he had taken. That hand did not return the pressure. It lay an instant in Lionel's warm claspnot repelling not responding-and was then very gently withdrawn.

"Did you come from London?" "No, sir; I found your letter yesterday at Hampton Court. had been staying some days in that neighbourhood. I came on, this morning,-I was afraid too unceremoniously; your kind welcome reassures me there."

The words were well chosen and frankly said. Probably they pleased the host, for the expression of his countenance was, on the whole, propitious; but he merely inclined his head with a kind of lofty indifference, then, glancing at his watch, he rang the bell. The servant entered promptly. "Let dinner be served within an hour." "Pray, sir," said Lionel, "do not change your hours on my account." Mr. Darrell's brow slightly contracted. Lionel's tact was in fault there; but the great man answered water looked so blue and so large familiarly said that such an one is me; and it were strange if a host could be deranged by consideration to his guest-on the first day too. face on which the young visitor Are you tired? Would you like to go to your room, or look out for half an hour? The sky is clearing." "I should so like to look out, sir."

"This way then."

Mr. Darrell, crossing the hall, threw open a door opposite to that by which Lionel entered, and the lake (we will so call it) lay before them .- separated from the house only by a shelving gradual declivity. on which were a few beds of flowers -not the most in vogue nowadays -and disposed in rambling oldfashioned parterres. At one angle, a quaint and dilapidated sun-dial; at the other, a long bowling-alley, terminated by one of those summerhouses which the Dutch taste, following the Revolution of 1688, brought into fashion. Mr. Darrell passed down this alley (no bowls there now), and observing that Lionel looked curiously towards the summer-house, of which the doors stood open, entered it. A lofty room with coved ceiling, painted with Roman trophies of helms and fasces, alternated with crossed fifes and fiddles, painted also.

"Amsterdam manners," said Mr. Darrell, slightly shrugging his shoulders. "Here a former race heard music, sung glees, and smoked from clay pipes. That age soon passed. unsuited to English energies, which are not to be united with Holland phlegm! But the view from the window-look out there. I wonder whether men in whigs and women in hoops enjoyed that. It is a mercy they did not clip those banks into a straight canal!"

The view was indeed lovely-the

and so limpid, woods and curving seen Guy Darrell's musing counbanks reflected deep on its peaceful hosom.

"How Vance would enjoy this!" cried Lionel. "It would come into a picture even better than the Thames."

" Vance-who is Vance?"

"The artist - a great friend of mine. Surely, sir, you have heard of him, or seen his pictures!"

" Himself and his pictures are since my time. Days tread down days for the Recluse, and he forgets that celebrities rise with their suns. to wane with their moons --

Truditur dies die, Novæque pergunt interire lung." "

"All suns do not set-all moons do not wane!" cried Lionel, with blunt enthusiasm, "When Horace speaks elsewhere of the Julian star. he compares it to a moon-'inter ignes minores'-and surely Fame is not among the orbs which 'pergunt interire'-hasten on to perish!"

"I am glad to see that you retain your recollection of Horace," said Mr. Darrell frigidly, and without continuing the allusion to celebrities," the most charming of all poets to a man of my years, and" (he very drily added) "the most useful for popular quotation to men at any age."

Then sauntering forth carelessly. he descended the sloping turf, came to the water-side, and threw himself at length on the grass-the wild thyme which he crushed sent up its bruised fragrance. There, resting his face on his hand, Darrell gazed along the water in abstracted silence. Lionel felt that he was forgotten: but he was not hurt. By this time a strong and admiring interest for his cousin had sprung up within his to my swans?" breast - he would have found it difficult to explain why. But who- sir." soever at that moment could have He felt as if he had said too much, tenance, or whosoever, a few minutes before, could have heard the very sound of his voice-sweetly. clearly full-each slow enunciation unaffectedly, mellowly distinct-making musical the homeliest roughest word, would have understood and shared the interest which Lionel could not explain. There are living human faces, which, independently of mere physical beauty, charm and enthral us more than the most perfect lineaments which Greek sculptor ever lent to a marble face: there are key-notes in the thrilling human voice, simply uttered, which can haunt the heart, rouse the passions, lull rampant multitudes, shake into dust the thrones of guarded kings, and effect more wonders than ever yet have been wrought by the most artful chorus or the deftest quill.

In a few minutes the swans from the further end of the water came sailing swiftly towards the bank on which Darrell reclined. He had evidently made friends with them, and they rested their white breasts close on the margin, seeking to claim his notice with a low hissing salutation, which, it is to be hoped, they changed for something less sibilant in that famous song with which they depart this life.

Darrell looked up. "They come to be fed," said he, "smooth emblems of the great social union. Affection is the offspring of utility. I am useful to them—they love me." He rose, uncovered, and bowed to the birds in mock courtesy: "Friends, I have no bread to give you."

LIONEL.-" Let me run in for some: I would be useful too," MR. DARRELL.—" Rival !-useful LIONEL (tenderly) .- " Or to you, and without waiting for permission. ran indoors to find some one whom he could ask for the bread.

"Sonless, childless, hopeless, objectless!" said Darrell, murmuringly to himself, and sunk again into reverie.

By the time Lionel returned with the bread, another petted friend had joined the master. A tame doe had caught sight of him from her covert far away, came in light bounds to his side, and was pushing her delicate nostril into his drooping hand. At the sound of Lionel's hurried step, she took flight, trotted off a few paces, then turned, looking wistfully.

"I did not know you had deer here." "Deer !- in this little paddock !of course not; only that doe. Fairthorn introduced her here. By the by," continued Darrell, who was now throwing the bread to the swans, and had resumed his careless unmeditative manner, "you were not aware that I have a brother hermit -a companion besides the swans and the doe. Dick Fairthorn is a year or two younger than myself, the son jacket. The servant was evidently of my father's bailiff. He was the cleverest boy at his grammar-school. Unluckily he took to the flute, and unfitted himself for the present century. He condescends, however, to act as my secretary-a fair classical scholar-plays chess-is useful to me-I am useful to him. We have an affection for each other. I never forgive any one who laughs at him. The half-hour bell, and you will meet him at dinner. Shall we come in and dress?"

They entered the house—the same man-servant was in attendance in the hall. "Show Mr. Haughton to his room." Darrell inclined his head -I use that phrase, for the gesture peared.

Led up an uneven staircase of oak. black as ebony, with huge balustrades, and newel-posts supporting clumsy balls, Lionel was conducted to a small chamber, modernised a century ago by a faded Chinese paper, and a mahogany bedstead, which took up three-fourths of the space, and was crested with dingy plumes, that gave it the cheerful look of a hearse; and there the attendant said, " Have you the key of your knapsack, sir? shall I put out your things to dress?" Dress! Then for the first time the boy remembered that he had brought with him no evening dress - nay, evening dress, properly so called, he possessed not at all in any corner of the world. It had never yet entered into his modes of existence. Call to mind when you were a boy of seventeen, "betwixt two ages hovering like a star," and imagine Lionel's sensations. He felt his cheek burn as if he had been detected in a crime. "I have no dress things," he said, piteously; "only a change of linen, and this," glancing at the summer a most gentlemanlike man - his native sphere that of groom of the chambers. "I will mention it to Mr. Darrell; and if you will favour me with your address in London, I will send to telegraph for what you want against to-morrow."

"Many thanks," answered Lionel. recovering his presence of mind; "I will speak to Mr. Darrell myself."

"There is the hot water, sir; that is the bell. I have the honour to be placed at your commands." The door closed, and Lionel unlocked his knapsack-other trousers, other waistcoat had he-those worn at the fair, and once white. Alas! they had not since then passed to the was neither bow nor nod-turned care of the laundress. Other shoes down a narrow passage and disap- -doubled-soled for walking. There was no help for it but to appear at dinner, attired as he had been be- to-morrow; there is no mist on the sprigs, and a fawn-coloured nether man. Could it signify much-only two men? Could the grave Mr. Darrell regard such trifles ?- Yes, if they intimated want of due respect.

" Durum! sed fit levins Patientia Quicquid corrigere est nefas."

On descending the stairs, the same high-bred domestic was in waiting to show him into the library. Mr. Darrell was there already, in the simple but punotilious costume of a gentleman who retains in seclusion the habits customary in the world. At the first glance Lionel thought he saw a slight cloud of displeasure on his host's brow. He went up to Mr. Darrell ingenuously, and apologised for the deficiencies of his itinerant wardrobe. "Say the truth." said his host; "you thought you were coming to an old churl with whom ceremony was misplaced." "Indeed no!" exclaimed Lionel.

"But - but I have so lately left school." "Your mother might have thought for you." "I did not stay to consult her, indeed, sir; I hope you are not

"No, but let me not offend you if I take advantage of my years and our relationship to remark that a young man should be careful not to let himself down below the standard of his own rank. If a king could bear to hear that he was only a ceremonial, a private gentleman may remember that there is but a ceremonial between himself and -his hatter!"

Lionel felt the colour mount his brow; but Darrell pressing the distasteful theme no farther, and wards the weather. "It will be fair lease and good-humour.

fore, in his light pedestrian jacket, hill yonder. Since you have a painmorning waistcoat flowered with ter for a friend, perhaps you yourself are a draughtsman. There are some landscape-effects here which Fairthorn shall point out to you." "I fear, Mr. Darrell," said Lionel.

looking down, "that to-morrow I must leave you."

"So soon? Well, I suppose the place must be very dull."

" Not that-not that; but I have offended you, and I would not repeat the offence. I have not the ceremonial' necessary to mark me as a gentleman-either here or at home."

"So! Bold frankness and ready wit command ceremonials," returned Darrell, and for the first time his lip wore a smile. "Let me present to you Mr. Fairthorn," as the door, opening, showed a shambling awkward figure, with loose black kneebreeches and buckled shoes. figure made a strange sidelong bow: and hurrying in a lateral course, like a crab suddenly alarmed, towards a dim recess protected by a long table, sunk behind a curtain-fold, and seemed to vanish as a crab does amidst the shingles.

"Three minutes yet to dinner, and two before the letter-carrier goes," said the host, glancing at his watch. "Mr. Fairthorn, will you write a note for me?" There was a mutter from behind the curtain. Darrell walked to the place, and whispered a few words, returned to the hearth, rang the bell. "Another letter for the post, Mills: Mr. Fairthorn is sealing it. You are looking at my book-shelves, Lionel, As I understand that your master spoke highly of you, I presume that you are fond of reading." "I think so, but I am not sure." seemingly forgetting its purport, answered Lionel, whom his cousin's turned his remarks carelessly to- conciliatory words had restored to

"You mean, perhaps, that you own master, reading hard, in the like reading, if you may choose your forenoon, it is true, for many hours own books,"

"Or rather, if I may choose my own time to read them, and that would not be on bright summer days."

" Without sacrificing bright summer days, one finds one has made little progress when the long winter nights come."

Yes, sir. But must the sacrifice be paid in books? I fancy I learned as much in the playground as I did in the schoolroom, and for the last few months, in much my at a stretch, and yet again for a few hours at evening, but rambling also through the streets, or listening to a few friends whom I have contrived to make-I think, if I can boast of any progress at all, the books have the smaller share in it."

"You would, then, prefer an active life to a studious one."

"Oh, yes-yes."

"Dinner is served," said the decorous Mr. Mills, throwing open the door.

CHAPTER III.

In our happy country every man's house is his castle. But however stoutly he fortify it, Care enters, as surely as she did in Horace's time, through the porticoes of a Roman's villa. Nor, whether ceilings be fretted with gold and ivory, or whether only coloured with whitewash, does it matter to Care any more than it does to a house-fly. But every tree, be it cedar or blackthorn, can harbour its singing bird: and few are the homes in which, from nooks least suspected, there starts not a music. Is it quite true that, " non avium eitherseque cantus somnum reducent?" Would not even Damocles himself have forgotten the sword, if the inte-player had chanced on the notes that lull?

THE dinner was simple enough, but | but not uncourteous indifference. well dressed and well served. One A remark of Lionel's on the porfootman, in plain livery, assisted Mr. Mills. Darrell ate sparingly, and drank only water, which was placed by his side iced, with a single glass of wine at the close of the repast, which he drank on bending his head to Lionel, with a certain knightly grace, and the prefatory words of "Welcome here to a Haughton."

Mr. Fairthorn was less abstemious -tasted of every dish, after examining it long through a pair of tortoise-shell spectacles, and drank Italian masters admit of copyists leisurely through a bottle of port, with greater facility than the Flemholding np every glass to the light. ish-"surely, sir, you yourself must Darrell talked with his usual cold have practised the art of painting?"

traits in the room turned the conversation chiefly upon pictures, and the host showed himself thoroughly accomplished in the attributes of the various schools and masters. Lionel, who was very fond of the art, and indeed painted well for a youthful amateur, listened with great delight.

"Surely, sir," said he, struck much with a very subtle observation upon the causes why the "Not I; but I instructed myself no, nor the pamphlets and partiaas a judge of pictures, because at one time I was a collector."

Fairthorn, speaking for the first time: "The rarest collection—such Albert Durers! such Holbeins! and that head by Leonardo da Vinci!" He stopped—looked extremely frightened—helped himself to the port—turning his back upon his host, to hold, as usual, the glass to the light.

"Are they here, sir!" asked

Lionel. Darrell's face darkened, and he made no answer; but his head sank on his breast, and he seemed suddenly absorbed in gloomy thought. Lionel felt that he had touched a wrong chord, and glanced timidly towards Fairthorn; but that gentleman cautiously held up his finger. and then rapidly put it to his lip, and as rapidly drew it away. After that signal, the boy did not dare to break the silence, which now lasted uninterruptedly till Darrell rose, and with the formal and superfluous question, "Any more wine?" led the way back to the library. There he onsconced himself in an easychair, and saving, "Will you find a book for yourself, Lionel?" took a volume at random from the nearest shelf, and soon seem absorbed in its contents. The room, made irregular by bay-windows, and shelves that projected as in public libraries. abounded with nook and recess. To one of these Fairthorn sidled himself, and became invisible, Lionel looked round the shelves. No belles lettres of our immediate generation were found there-none of those authors most in request in circulating libraries and literary institutes. The shelves disclosed no poets, no essayists, no novelists, more recent than the Johnsonian age. Neither in the lawyer's library mentary volumes that should have spoken of the once eager politician. But there were superb copies of the ancient classics. French and Italian authors were not wanting, nor such of the English as have withstood the test of time. The larger portion of the shelves seemed, however, devoted to philosophical works. Here alone was novelty admitted - the newest essays on science, or the best editions of old works thereon. Lionel at length made his choice-a volume of the Faerie Queen, Coffee was served; at a later hour tea. The clock struck ten. Darrell laid down his book.

"Mr. Fairthorn—the flute!"

From the recess a mutter; and presently-the musician remaining still hidden-there came forth the sweetest note-so dulcet, so plaintive! Lioncl's ear was ravished. The music suited well with the enchanted page, through which his fancy had been wandering dreamlike-the flute with the Faerie Queen. As the air flowed liquid on. Lionel's eyes filled with tears. He did not observe that Darrell was intently watching him. When the music stopped, he turned aside to wine the tears from his eyes. Somehow or other, what with the poem, what with the flute, his thoughts had wandered far far hence to tho green banks and blue waves of the Thames-to Sophy's charming face, to her parting childish gift! And where was she now? Whither passing away, after so brief a holiday, into the shadows of forlorn life?

Darrell's bell-like voice smote his ear.

"Spenser; You love him! Do you write poetry?"

"No, sir; I only feel it!"

more recent than the Johnsonian "Do neither!" said the host, abruptly. Then, turning away, he were to be found any law books— lighted his candle, murmured a quick good night, and disappeared through a side-door which led to his own rooms.

Lionel looked round for Fairthorn, who now emerged ab angulo have enchanted me! I never be- him a question, as if you sought lieved the flute could have been to know what he did not himself capable of such effects!"

-from his nook.

Mr. Fairthorn's grotesque face lighted up. He took off his spectacles, as if the better to contemplate the face of his eulogist. "So you deep in his inmost self.

Who would not be more than pleased?"

"You should hear me in the open mysterious corner. air."

"Let me do so-to-morrow."

" My dear young sir, with all my heart. Hist!"-gazing round as if haunted-"I like you. I wish him to like you. Answer all his questions as if you did not care how he "Oh, Mr. Fairthorn, how you turned you inside out. Never ask confide. So there is something. you think, in a flute, after all? There are people who prefer the

"Then they never heard your were pleased! really?" he said, flute, Mr. Fairthorn." The musichuckling a strange grim chuckle, cian again emitted his discordant chuckle, and, nodding his head "Pleased! it is a cold word! nervously and cordially, shambled away without lighting a candle, and was engulfed in the shadows of some fiddle."

CHAPTER IV.

The Old World and the New.

IT was long before Lionel could sleep. What with the strange house host. "No leave-taking to-day, as and the strange master-what with you threatened. I find you have the magic finte and the musician's made an appointment with Mr. admonitory caution - what with Fairthorn, and I shall place you tender and regretful reminiscences under his care. You may like to of Sophy, his brain had enough to look over the old house, and make work on. When he slept at last, yourself" - Darrell paused - "At his slumber was deep and heavy, home," jerked out Mr. Fairthorn, and he did not wake till gently filling up the hiatus. Darrell turned shaken by the well-bred arm of Mr. his eye towards the speaker, who Mills. "I humbly beg pardon- evidently became much frightened, nine o'clock, sir, and the breakfast- and, after looking in vain for a bell going to ring." Lionel's toilet corner, sidled away to the window, was soon hurried over; Mr. Darrell and poked himself behind the curand Fairthorn were talking together tain. "Mr. Fairthorn, in the capa-as he entered the breakfast-room— city of my secretary, has learned to the same room as that in which find me thoughts, and put them in they had dined.

"Good morning, Lionel," said the his own words," said Darrell, with a coldness almost icy. He then with a led horse. "I am going to seated himself at the breakfasttable : Lionel followed his example, and Mr. Fairthorn, courageously emerging, also took a chair and a Darrell," said Lionel; "it is a glorious day."

" But there will be showers later. The fish are at play on the surface softened glance towards Fairthorn, who was looking the picture of misery. "After twelve, it will be just the weather for trout to rise: and if you fish, Mr. Fairthorn will lend you a rod. He is a worthy successor of Izaak Walton, and loves a companion as Izaak did, but more rarely gets one."

"Are there trout in your lake,

"The lake! You must not dream But I regard my lake as a politic community, under the protection of devour each other, as Europeans, fishes, and other cold-blooded creatures, wisely do, in order to check the overgrowth of population. To fatten one pike it takes a great many l minnows. Naturally I support the vested rights of pike. I have been a lawver."

It would be in vain to describe the manner in which Mr. Darrell vented this or similar remarks of mocking irony, or sarcastio spleen. It was not bitter nor sneering, but in his usual mellifluous level tone and passionless tranquillity.

leave you, Lionel," said the host, "to make-friends with Mr. Fairthorn, and I thus complete, according to my own original intention. roll. "You are a true diviner, Mr. the sentence which he diverted astray." He passed across the hall to the open house-door, and stood by the horse stroking its neck, and giving some directions to the groom. of the lake," Darrell added, with a Lionel and Fairthorn followed to the threshold, and the beauty of the horse provoked the boy's admiration: it was a dark muzzled brown, of that fine old-fashioned breed of English roadster, which is now so seldom seen; showy, bow-necked, longtailed, stumbling, reedy hybrids, born of bad barbs, ill-mated, having mainly supplied their place. This was, indeed, a horse of great power, immense girth of loin, high shoulder. broad hoof; and such a head! the of invading that sacred water. The ear, the frontal, the nostril! you inhabitants of rivulets and brooks seldom see a human physiognomy not within my boundary are beyond | half so intelligent, half so expressive the pale of Fawley civilisation, to be of that high spirit and sweet genesnared and slaughtered like Caffres, rous temper, which, when united, red men, or any other savages, for constitute the ideal of thoroughwhom we bait with a missionary, breeding whether in horse or man. and whom we impale on a bayonet. The English rider was in harmony with the English steed. Darrell at this moment was resting his arm the law, and leave its denizens to lightly on the animal's shoulder, and his head still uncovered. It has been said before that he was of imposing presence; the striking attribute of his person, indeed, was that of unconscious grandeur; yet, though above the ordinary height, he was not very tall-five feet eleven at the utmost - and far from being very erect. On the contrary, there was that habitual bend in his proud neck which men who meditate much and live alone almost invariably contract. But there was, to use an expression common with our older writers, that "great air" about him which filled The breakfast was just over as a the eye, and gave him the dignity of groom passed in front of the windows elevated stature, the commanding of a young man, and probably little changed from what it might have youthfulness still lingered even ou the countenance-strange, for sorrow is supposed to expedite the work of age; and Darrell had known sorrow of a kind most adapted to harrow his peculiar nature, as great in ruins. No grey was visible in the dark brown hair, that, worn short behind, still retained in front the large Jove-like curl. No wrinkle, save at the corner of the eyes, marred the pale bronze of the firm cheek : the forehead was smooth as marble. and as massive. It was that forehead which chiefly contributed to the superb expression of his whole aspect. It was high to a fault; the perceptive organs, over a dark, strongly-marked, arched eyebrow. powerfully developed, as they are with most eminent lawyers; it did not want for breadth at the temples: vet, on the whole, it bespoke more of intellectual vigour and dauntless will than of serene philosophy or all-embracing benevolence. It was the forehead of a man formed to command and awe the passions and intellect of others by the strength of passions in himself, rather concentred than chastised, and by an intellect forceful from the weight of its mass rather than the niceness of its balance. The other features harmonized with that brow: they were of the noblest order of aquiline, at once high and delicate. The lip had a rare combination of exquisite refinement and inflexible resolve. The eye, in repose, was cold, bright, is intense, but undemonstrative unrevealing, with a certain absent, their hatred implacable, but unremusing, self-absorbed expression, vengeful. Too proud to revenge that often made the man's words too galled to pardon.

aspect that accompanies the upright appear as if spoken mechanically. carriage. His figure was inclined to and assisted towards that seeming of be slender, though broad of shoulder listless indifference to those whom and deep of chest; it was the figure | he addressed, by which he wounded vanity, without, perhaps, any malice prepense. But it was an eye in which been at five-and-twenty. A certain | the pupil could suddenly expand, the hue change from grey to dark, and the cold still brightness flash into vivid fire. It could not have occurred to any one, even to the most commonplace woman, to have described Darrell's as a handsome face; the in its degree as ever left man's heart expression would have seemed trivial and derogatory: the words that would have occurred to all, would have been somewhat to this effect :-"What a magnificent countenance! What a noble head!" Yet an experienced physiognomist might have noted that the same lineaments which bespoke a virtue bespoke also its neighbouring vice: that with so much will there went stubborn obstinacy; that with that power of grasp there would be the tenacity in adherence which narrows, in astringing, the intellect; that a prejudice once conceived, a passion once oherished, would resist all rational argument for relinquishment. When men of this mould do relinquish prejudice or passion, it is by their own impulse, their own sure conviction that what they hold is worthless: then they do not yield it graciously; they fling it from them in scorn, but not a scorn that consoles. That which they thus wrench away had grown a living part of themselves; their own flesh bleeds -the wound seldom or never heals. Such men rarely fail in the achievement of what they covet, if the gods are neutral; but, adamant against the world, they are vulnerable through their affections. Their love

There stood Guy Darrell, to whom the bar had destined its highest honours, to whom the senate had accorded its most rapturous cheers: and the more you gazed on him as he there stood, the more perplexed became the enigma, how with a career sought with such energy, advanced with such success, the man had abruptly subsided into a listless recluse, and the career had been voluntarily resigned for a home without neighbours, a hearth without children.

"I had no idea," said Lionel, as Darrell rode slowly away, soon lost from sight amidst the thick foliage of summer trees-"I had no idea that my cousin was so young!"

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Fairthorn; "he is only a year older than I am!"

"Older than you!" exclaimed Lionel, staring in blunt amaze at the elderly-looking personage beside him; "yet true, he told me so himself."

"And I am fifty-one last birthday."

"Mr. Darrell fifty-two! Incredible!"

"I don't know why we should ever grow old, the life we lead." observed Mr. Fairthorn, readjusting his spectacles. "Time stands so still! Fishing, too, is very condusive to longevity. If you will follow me, we will get the rods; and the flute-you are quite sure you would like the flute? Yes! thank you. my dear young sir. And yet there are folks who prefer the fiddle!"

"Is not the sun a little too bright for the fly at present; and will you not, in the meanwhile, show me over the house?"

"Very well; not that this house has much worth seeing. The other indeed would have had a musicthe open air for the flute. This way." thence into a gable recess that ad-

I spare thee, gentle reader, the minute inventory of Fawley Manor House. It had nothing but its antiquity to recommend it. It had a great many rooms, all, except those used as the dining-room and library, very small, and very lowinnumerable closets, nooks-unexpected cavities, as if made on purpose for the venerable game of hideand-seek. Save a stately old kitchen. . the offices were sadly defective even for Mr. Darrell's domestic establishment, which consisted but of two men and four maids (the stablemen not lodging in the house). Drawingroom, properly speaking, that primitive mansion had none. At some remote period a sort of gallery under the gable roofs (above the first floor), stretching from end to end of the house, might have served for the reception of guests on grand occasions. For fragments of mouldering . tapestry still, here and there, clung to the walls; and a high chimneypiece, whereon, in plaster relief, was commemorated the memorable fishing party of Anthony and Cleopatra, retained patches of colour and gilding, which must, when fresh, have made the Egyptian queen still more appallingly hideous, and the fish at the end of Anthony's hook still less resembling any creature known to ichthyologists.

The library had been arranged into shelves from floor to roof by Mr. Darrell's father, and subsequently for the mere purpose of holding as many volumes as possible. brought out into projecting wings (college-like) by Darrell himself. without any pretension to mediæval character. With this room communicated a small reading-closet, which the host reserved to himself; and this, by a circular stair cut into the massive wall, ascended first into Mr. room! But, after all, nothing like Darrell's sleeping-chamber, and host had fitted up for the pur- In London?" pose of scientific experiments in chemistry, or other branches of a peep of some of the treasures, only practical philosophy. These more don't betray me." private rooms Lionel was not permitted to enter.

Altogether the house was one of those cruel tenements which it would be a sin to pull down, or even materially to alter, but which it would be an hourly inconvenience for a modern family to inhabit. It was out of all character with Mr. Darrell's former position in life, or with the fortune which Lionel vaguely supposed him to possess, and considerably underrated. Like Sir Nicholas Bacon, the man had grown too large for his habitation.

"I don't wonder," said Lionel, as, their wanderings over, he and Fairthorn found themselves in the library, "that Mr. Darrell began to build a new house. But it would have been a great pity to pull down this for it."

"Pull down this! Don't hint at such an idea to Mr. Darrell. He would as soon have pulled down the British Monarchy! Nay, I suspect, sooner."

"But the new building must surely have swallowed up the old one ? "

"Oh. no: Mr. Darrell had a plan by which he would have enclosed this separately in a kind of court, with an open screen-work or cloister: and it was his intention to appropriate it entirely to mediæval antiquities, of which he has a wonderful collection. He had a notion of illustrating every earlier reign in which his ancestors flourished different apartments in correspondence with different dates. It would have been a chronicle of national manners."

joined the gallery, and which the question, where is this collection?

"Hush! hush! I will give you Fairthorn here, with singular rapidity, considering that he never moved in a straightforward direction, undulated into the open air in front of the house, described a rhomboid towards a side-buttress in the new building, near to which was a postern-door; unlocked that door from a key in his pocket, and, motioning Lionel to follow him, entered within the ribs of the stony skeleton. Lionel followed in a sort of supernatural awe, and beheld, with more substantial alarm, Mr. Fairthorn winding up an inclined plank which he embraced with both arms, and by which he ultimately ascended to a timber joist in what should have been an upper floor, only flooring there was none. Perched there, Fairthorn glared down on Lionel through his spectacles, "Dangerous," he said, whisperingly ; "but one gets used to everything! If you feel afraid, don't venture!" Lionel, animated by that doubt of his courage, sprang up the plank, balancing himself, schoolboy fashion, with outstretched arms, and gained the side of his guide.

"Don't touch me!" exclaimed Mr. Fairthorn, shrinking, "or we shall both be over. Now observe and imitate." Dropping himself then carefully and gradually, till he dropped on the timber joist as if it were a velocipede, his long legs dangling down, he, with thigh and hand, impelled himself onward till he gained the ridge of a wall, on which he delivered his person, and wiped his spectacles.

Lionel was not long before he " Here we stood in the same place. are," said Fairthorn.

"But, if it be not an impertinent "I don't see the collection," answered Lionel, first peering down in deal, in order to support its misathwart the joists upon the rugged cellaneous contents, and was lighted ground overspread with stones and from a large window (not visible in rubbish, then glancing up through front of the house), glazed in dull similar interstices above to the gaunt | rough glass, with ventilators. rafters.

"Here are some-most precious," answered Fairthorn, tapping behind him .- "Walled up, except where these boards, cased in iron, are nailed across, with a little door just big enough to creep through: but that is locked-Chubb's lock, and Mr. Darrell keeps the key !-treasures for a palace! No, you can't peep through here-not a chink; but come on a little further,-mind your footing,"

Skirting the wall, and still on the perilous ridge, Fairthorn crept on, formed an angle, and, stopping short, clapped his eye to the crevice of some planks nailed rudely across a yawning aperture. Lionel found another crevice for himself, and saw, piled up in admired disorder, pictures, with their backs turned to a desolate | were out of the building; and Lionel wall, rare cabinets, and articles of felt like a knight of old who had curious furniture, chests, boxes, been led into sepulchral balls by a crates-heaped pellmell. This re- wizard. ceptacle had been roughly floored

"These are the heavy things, and least costly things, that no one could well rob. The pictures here are merely curious as early specimens, intended for the old house, all spoiling and rotting; Mr. Darrell wishes them to do so, I believe! What he wishes must be done! my dear young sir-a prodigious mind-it is of granite!"

"I cannot understand it," said Lionel, aghast. "The last man I should have thought capriciously whimsical."

"Whimsical! Bless my soul! don't say such a word-don't, pray ! or the roof will fall down upon us! Come away. You have seen all you can see. You must go first nowmind that loose stone there !"

Nothing further was said till they

CHAPTER V.

The annals of empire are briefly chronicled in family records brought down to the present day, showing that the race of men is indeed "like leaves on trees, now green in youth, now withering on the ground." Yet to the branch the most bare will green leaves return, so long as the sap can remount to the branch from the root; but the branch which has ceased to take life from the root-hang it high, hang it low-is a prev to the wind and the woodman.

ning through green pastures, half a trout.

It was mid-day. The boy and his overcast, as Darrell had predicted, new friend were standing apart, as but the rain did not yet fall. The becomes silent anglers, on the banks two anglers were not long before of a narrow brawling rivulet, run- they had filled a basket with small mile from the house. The sky was Then Lionel, who was by no

long grass to his companion.

me take advantage of the present same stock ages ago)-left him all time, and hear the flute, while we his money. Mr. Darrell was not can yet enjoy the open air. No, not dependent on his profession when by the margin, or you will be always he stood up in Parliament. And looking after the trout. On the since we have been here, such rising ground, see that old thorn- savings! Not that Mr. Darrell is The new building looks well from it, money in this place? You should What a pile it would have been! I have seen the establishment we kept may not ask you, I suppose, why it in Carlton Gardens. Such a cook is left uncompleted. Perhaps it too-a French gentleman-looked would have cost too much, or would like a marquess. Those were happy have been disproportionate to the days, and proud ones! It is true estate."

"To the present estate it would have been disproportioned, but not to the estate Mr. Darrell intended day." to add to it. As to cost, you don't know him. He would never have undertaken what he could not afford to complete; and what he once unwould have scared him from finish-Prodigious mind - granite! And so rich!" added Fairthorn. with an air of great pride. onght to know: I write all his letters on money matters. How much do you think he has, without counting land?"

"I cannot guess."

"Nearly half a million; in two years it will be more than half a million. And he had not three hundred a-year when he began life; for Fawley was sadly mortgaged,"

"Is it possible! Could any lawver make half a million at the bar ?"

would. When he sets his mind on a thing—the thing is done: no help away from what appears on the surfor it. But his fortune was not all face-far as that rivulet lies from its made at the bar, though a great part source! My dear young sir, Mr. of it was. bachelor of the same name, but who it does not become you and me to had never been heard of hereabouts talk. He never talks of them. The till he wrote from Calcutta to Mr. least I can do for my benefactor is means fond of fishing, laid his rod Darrell (inquiring if they were any on the bank, and strolled across the relations-and Mr. Darrell referred him to the College-at-Arms, which "It will rain soon," said he. "Let proved that they came from the ree-let us go and sit under it, avaricious, but how can he spend that I order the dinner here, but it can't be the same thing. Do you like fillet of veal?-we have one to-

"We used to have fillet of veal at school on Sundays. I thought it good then."

"It makes a nice mince," said dertook, no thoughts of the cost Mr. Fairthorn, with a sensual movement of his lips. "One must think of dinner when one lives in the country-so little else to think of! Not that Mr. Darrell does, but then he is-granite!"

"Still," said Lionel, smiling," I do not get my answer. Why was the house uncompleted? and why did Mr. Darrell retire from public life ? "

"He took both into his head; and when a thing once gets there, it is no use asking why. But," added Fairthorn, and his innocent ugly face changed into an expression of earnest sadness-" but no doubt he "If any man could, Mr. Darrell had his reasons. He has reasons for all he does, only they lie far far An old East Indian Darrell has known griefs on which not to pry into his secrets, nor I know so little about it-not even will you when you come to know my cousin." him. Prodigious mind !- graniteovergrown with sensitive plants, name. Your grandfather was his good."

Mr. Fairthorn screwed his flutean exceedingly handsome one. He pointed out its beauties to Liquela present from Mr. Darrell last Christmas - and then he began. Strange thing. Art! especially fore he warmed into his subject. music. Out of an art, a man may for an imbecile-at best a grown infant. Put him into his art, and how high he soars above you! How which he has become a denizen, and, unlocking the gates with his an humble, reverent visitor.

In his art Fairthorn was certainly a master, and the air he now played was exquisitely soft and plaintive; quiet sky, with the lone but summer lendscape, with Lionel's melancholic but not afflicted train of thought. The boy could only murmur, "Beautiful!" when the musician ceased.

"It is an old air," said Fairthorn; "I don't think it is known. I found its scale scrawled down in a copy of the Eikon Basilike, with the name of Joannes Darrell, Eq. Aurat. date, was Sir John Darrell, the cavalier who fought for Charles I., father of the graceless Sir Ralph, who flourished under Charles II. Both their portraits are in the dining-room."

"Tell me something of the family; self or his exiled fathers, bought babble them out. And he is so how the Haughtons and Darrells kind-so good-never gets into a seem to have been so long connected. passion; but it is so awful to wound I see by the portraits that the him-it gives him such pain; Haughton name was borne by that's why he frightens me- former Darrells, then apparently frightens me horribly; and so he dropped, now it is borne again by

"He bears it only as a Christian Yes, a little music will do us both sponsor. But he is nevertheless the head of your family."

"So he says. How?"

Fairthorn gathered himself up, his knees to his ohin, and began in the tone of a guide who has got his lesson by heart, though it was not long be-"The Darrells are supposed to be so trivial you would mistake him | have got their name from a knight in the reign of Edward III., who held the lists in a joust victoriously against all comers, and was called, quietly he enters into a heaven of or called himself, John the Dare-all; or, in old spelling, the Der-all! They were amongst the most powerful golden key, admits you to follow, families in the country; their alliances were with the highest houses -Montfichets, Nevilles, Mowbrays: they descend through such marriages from the blood of Plantagenet it accorded with the clouded vet kings. You'll find their names in Chronicles in the early French wars. Unluckily they attached themselves to the fortunes of Earl Warwick, the King-maker, to whose blood they were allied; their representative was killed in the fatal field of Barnet: their estates were of course confiscated; the sole son and heir of that ill-fated politician passed into the Low Countries, where he served as a soldier. His son and grandson written under it. That, by the followed the same calling under foreign banners. But they must have kept up the love of the old land, for in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII., the last male Darrell returned to England with some broad gold pieces, saved by himsome land in this county, in which | upon such a hranch. He squandered the ancestral possessions had once all he could squander, and would been large, and built the present have left his children heggars, but house, of a size suited to the altered that he was providentially slain in fortunes of a race that, in a former a tavern brawl for boasting of a age, had manned castles with re- lady's favours to her husband's face. tainers. The baptismal name of the The husband suddenly stabbed him soldier who thus partially refounded -no fair duello-for Sir Ralph was the old line in England was that now borne by your cousin, Guy-a Still the family fortune was much name always favoured by Fortune dilapidated, yet still the Darrells in the family annals; for in Eliza- lived in the fine house of the Haughbeth's time, from the rank of small tons, and left Fawley to the owls. gentry, to which their fortune alone lifted them since their return to their native land, the Darrells rose once of high rank, an earl's daughter. He more into wealth and eminence under a handsome young Sir Guy -we have his picture in black flowered velvet-who married the to settle all the Haughton estates on heiress of the Haughtons, a family her and the children she might bear that had grown rich under the to him. The smaller Darrell pro-Tudors, and was in high favour with the Maiden-Queen. This Sir his son hy his first marriage. This Guy was befriended by Essex, and knighted by Elizabeth herself. Their Darrell had children by his second old house was then abandoned for the larger mansion of the Haughtons, which had also the advantage herited the Haughton property. The of being nearer to the Court. The son by the first marriage had nothing renewed prosperity of the Darrells but Fawley, and the scanty domain was of short duration. The Civil round it. You descend from the Wars came on and Sir John Darrell took the losing side. He escaped to France with his only son. He is said to have been an accomplished, melancholy man; and my belief is, that he composed that air which you justly admire for its Roman Catholic, and died in a con-But the son, Ralph, was brought up in France with Charles II. and other gay roisterers. On the return of the Stuart, Ralph ran off invincible with the small-sword. But Sir Ralph's son, in his old age, married a second time, a young lady must have been very much in love with her, despite his age, for to win her consent or her father's he agreed perty had already been entailed on is how the family came to split. Old wife; the eldest of those children took the Haughton name and insecond marriage, Mr. Darrell from the first. You understand now, my dear young sir?"

"Yes, a little; hut I should very much like to know where those fine Haughton estates are now?"

"Where they are now? I can't mournful sweetness. He turned say. They were once in Middlesex. Prohably much of the land, as it was sold piecemeal, fell into small allotments, constantly changing hands. But the last relics of the property were, I know, bought on speculation with the daughter of the Roundhead by Cox the distiller; for, when we were in London, hy Mr. Darrell's to whom his estates had been given, were in London, hy Mr. Darrell's and, after getting them back, left his desire I went to look after them, and wife in the country, and made love inquire if they could be repurto other men's wives in town. Shock- chased. And I found that so rapid ing profligate! no fruit could thrive in a few years has been the proscountry, that if one did buy them QUARY! You may have read his back, one would buy twelve villas, works. I know there is one copy several streets, two squares, and a of them in the British Musenm. paragon! But as that symptom of and there is another here, but that national advancement, though a copy Mr. Darrell keeps under lock proud thought in itself, may not and key." have any pleasing interest for you, I return to the Darrells. From the know the titles of those works." time in which the Haughton estate had parted from them, they settled back in their old house of Fawley. But they could never again hold up their heads with the noblemen and great squires in the county. As much as they could do to live at all upon the little patrimony; still the reminiscence of what they had been, made them maintain it jealously, younger sons generally became soldiers, and being always a venturesome race, and having nothing particular to make them value their existence, were no less generally killed off betimes. The family became thoroughly obscure, slipped out of place in the county, seldom rose to be even justices of the peace, never contrived to marry heiresses again, but only the daughters of some neighbouring parson or squire as poor as themselves, but always of gentle blood. Oh, they were as proud as Spaniards in that respect! So from father to son, each generation grew obscurer and poorer: for. entail the estate as they might, still some settlements on it were necessary, and no settlements were ever brought into it; and thus entails were cut off to admit some new mortgage, till the rent-roll was somewhat less than £300 a-year when Mr. Darrell's father came into possession. Yet somehow or other he got to college, where no Darrell had Mr. Darrell's portrait over the chimbeen since the time of the Glorious ney-piece in his own reading-room; Revolution, and was a learned man and he had it in his own library in perity of this great commercial and an antiquary-A GREAT ANTI-

"I am ashamed to say I don't even

"There were 'Popular Ballads on the Wars of the Roses;' 'Darelliana,' consisting of traditional and other memorials of the Darrell family; 'Inquiry into the Origin of Legends connected with Dragons: ' 'Hours amongst Monumental Brasses,' and other ingenious lucubrations above the taste of the vulgar: some of them were even and entail it rigidly. The eldest read at the Royal Society of Antison would never have thought of quaries. They cost much to print any profession or business; the and publish. But I have heard my father, who was his bailiff, say that he was a pleasant man, and was fond of reciting old scraps of poetry, which he did with great energy; indeed. Mr. Darrell declares that it was the noticing, in his father's animated and felicitous elocution, the effects that voice, look, and delivery can give to words, which made Mr. Darrell himself the fine speaker he is. But I can only recollect the antiquary as a very majestic gentleman, with a long pigtail-awful, rather, not so much so as his son, but still awful - and so sad-looking; you would not have recovered your spirits for a week if you had seen him, especially when the old house wanted repairs, and he was thinking how he could pay for them !"

"Was Mr. Darrell, the present

one, an only child?"

"Yes, and much with his father. whom he loved most dearly, and to this day he sighs if he has to mention his father's name! He has old Carlton Gardens. Our Mr. Dar-1 transmuted by Mr. Cox into squares rell's mother was very pretty, even and a parsgon?" as I remember her: she died when he was about ten years old. And though much dilapidated, with its she too was a relation of yours-a park, though stripped of saleable Haughton by blood; but perhaps you will be ashamed of her, when I from farms that still appertained to say she was a governess in a rich mercantile family. She had been left an orphan. I believe old Mr. Darrell (not that he was old then) fund to clear off the mortgages married her because the Haughtons could or would do nothing for her. and because she was much snubbed and put upon, as I am told governesses usually are-married her because, poor as he was, he was still the head of both families, and bound Haughton, though not on the turf, to do what he could for decayed had a grand way of living; and while scions! The first governess a Dar- Guy Darrell went into the law to rell ever married, but no true Dar- make a small patrimony a large forrell would have called that a mesal- tune, your father, my dear young liance, since she was still a Haugh- | sir, was put into the Guards to reduce ton and 'Fors non mutat genus'-Chance does not change race."

"But how comes it that the Hanghtons, my grandfather Haughton. I suppose, would do nothing for his own kinswoman?" "It was not your grandfather, Robert Haughton, who was a generous man - he was then a mere youngster, hiding himself for debtbut your great-grandfather, who was a hard man, and on the turf. He never had money to give-only money for betting. He left the Haughton estates sadly dipped. But looked up to him as to an elder when Robert succeeded, he came brother. Many's the scrape Guy got forward, was godfather to our Mr. Darrell, insisted on sharing the expense of sending him to Eton, where he became greatly distinguished; thence to Oxford, where he increased his reputation; and would probably have done more for him, only Mr. Darrell, once his foot on the ladder. wanted no help to climb to the top."

still had the Haughton estates? aid, and how came they at last to Their last relics had not been yet quarrel?"

"No; the grand old mansion, timber, was still left with a rental the residence, which would have sufficed a prudent man for the luxuries of life, and allowed a reserve gradually. Abstinence and self-denial for one or two generations would have made a property, daily rising in value as the metropolis advanced to its outskirts, a princely estate for a third. But Robert a large patrimony-into Mr. Cox's distillery."

Lionel coloured, but remained silent. Fairthorn, who was as unconscious, in his zest of narrator, that he was giving pain as an entomologist in his zest for collecting, when he pins a live moth into his cabinet, resumed: "Your father and Guy Darrell were warm friends as boys and youths. Guy was the elder of the two, and Charlie Haughton (I beg your pardon, he was always called Charlie) him ont of; and many a pound, I believe, when Guy had some funds of his own, did Gny lend to Charlie,"

"I am very sorry to hear that," said Lionel, sharply.

Fairthorn looked frightened. "I'm afraid I have made a blunder. Don't tell Mr. Darrell."

"Certainly not: I promise. But "Then my grandfather, Robert, how came my father to need this

"Your father Charlie became a | his commission, went into the Line; gay young man about town, and very much the fashion. He was like you in person, only his forehead was lower, and his eye not so steady. Mr. Darrell studied the law in Chambers. When Robert Haughton died, what with his debts, what with his father's, and what with Charlie's post-obits and I O U's, there seemed small chance indeed of saving the estate to the Haughtons. But then Mr. Darrell looked close into matters, and with such skill did he settle them that he removed the fear of foreclosure; and what with increasing the rental here and there, and replacing old mortgages by new at less interest, he contrived to extract from the property an income of nine hundred pounds a-year to Charlie (three times the income Darrell had inherited himself), where before it had seemed that the debts were more than the assets. Foreseeing how much the land would rise in value, he then earnestly implored Charlie (who unluckily had the estate in fee-simple, as Mr. Darrell has this, to sell if he pleased) to live on his income, and in a few years a part of the property might be sold for building purposes, on terms that would save all the rest, with the old house in which Darrells and Haughtons both had once reared generations. Charlie promised, I know, and I've no doubt, my dear young sir, quite sincerely-but all men are not granite! He took to gambling, incurred debts of honour, sold the farms, one by one, resorted to usurers, and one night, after playing six hours at piquet, nothing was left for him but to sell all that remained to Mr. Cox the distiller, unknown to Mr. Darrell, who was then married himself, working hard, and living quite out of news of the fashionable world. Then Charlie Haughton sold out of galled him; it was the thought that the Guards, spent what he got for his father was bought for the altar and finally, in a country town, in which I don't think he was quartered, but, having gone there on some sporting speculation, was unwillingly detained-married-"

" My mother!" said Lionel, haughtily; "and the best of women she is. What then?"

"Nothing, my dear young sirnothing, except that Mr. Darrell never forgave it. He has his preindices; this marriage shocked one of them."

"Prejudice against my poor mother! I always supposed so! I wonder why? The most simplehearted, inoffensive, affectionate woman."

"I have not a doubt of it: but it is beginning to rain. Let us go home. I should like some luncheon; it breaks the day."

"Tell me first why Mr. Darrell has a prejudice against my mother. I don't think that he has even seen her. Unaccountable caprice. Shocked him, too - what a word! Tell me-I beg-I insist,"

"But you know," said Fairthorn. half piteously, half snappishly, "that Mrs. Haughton was the daughter of a linendraper, and her father's money got Charlie out of the county jail; and Mr. Darrell said, 'Sold even your name!' My father heard him say it in the hall at Fawley. Mr. Darrell was there during a long vacation, and your father came to see him. Your father fired up, and they never saw each other. I believe. again."

Lionel remained still as if thunder-stricken. Something in his mother's language and manner had at times made him suspect that she was not so well born as his father. But it was not the discovery that she was a tradesman's daughter that out of the county jail! It was those old gloomy house by Fairthorn's outting words, "Sold even your side, as one who, for the first time in name." His face, before very orim- life, feels on his heart the leaden son, became livid; his head sunk on | weight of an hereditary shame. his hreast. He walked towards the

CHAPTER VI.

Showing how minful it is in a man who does not care for his honour to beget children, the contents of a cold chicken-pie, he silently stepped out of the room and slunk away into a thick copse at the farthest end of the paddock. He longed to be alone. The rain descended, not heavily, but in penetrating drizzle; he did not feel it, or rather he felt glad that there was no gaudy mocking sunlight. He sate down forlorn in the hollows of a glen which the copse covered, and buried his face in his clasped hands.

Lionel Haughton, as the reader may have noticed, was no premature man-a manly boy, but still a hahitant of the twilight, dreamy, shadow-land of boyhood. Noble elements were stirring fitfully within him, but their agencies were crude undeveloped. Sometimes. through the native acuteness of quickly and truly as a man-then. again, through the warm haze of undisciplined tenderness, or the raw mists of that sensitive pride in which ohiects, small in themselves, loom large with undetected outlines, he fell back into the passionate dimness of a child's reasoning. He was inpoint of honour; dauntless in peril, but morbidly trembling at the very name;" nay, most probably ascribed

WHEN Lionel saw Mr. Fairthorn shadow of disgrace, as a foal, desdevoting his intellectual being to tined to be the war-horse, and trample down levelled steel, starts in its tranquil pastures at the rustling of a leaf. Glowingly romantic, but not inclined to vent romance in literary creations, his feelings were the more high-wrought and enthusiastic because they had no outlet in poetio channels. Most boys of great ability and strong passion write verses-it is nature's relief to brain and heart at the critical turningage. Most boys thus gifted do so: a few do not, and out of those few Fate selects the great men of action-those large luminous characters that stamp poetry on the world's prosaio surface. Lionel had in him the pith and substance of Fortune's grand nobodies, who become Fame's abrupt somebodies when the chances of life throw his intellect, he apprehended truths suddenly in their way a noble something, to be ardently coveted and boldly won. But I repeat, as yet he was a boy-so he sate there, his hands before his face, an unreasoning self-torturer. He knew now why this haughty Darrell had written with so little tenderness and respect to his beloved mother. tensely amhitious: Quixotic in the Darrell looked on her as the cause of his ignoble kinsman's "sale of to her not the fond girlish love paternal disgrace-had taunted his which levels all disparities of rank, father in yonder old hall-for what? but the vulgar cold-blooded design —the marriage from which Lionel to exchange her father's bank-notes sprung! The hands grew tighter for a marriage beyond her station. and tighter before that burning And he was the debtor to this face. He did not weep, as he had supercilious creditor, as his father done in Vance's presence at a had been before him! His father! thought much less galling. Not till then he had been so proud of that tears would have misbecome that relationship. Mrs. Haughton him. Shallow judges of human had not been happy with her cap- nature are they who think that tain; his confirmed habits of wild tears in themselves ever misbecome dissipation had embittered her boy, or even man. Well did the union, and at last worn away her sternest of Roman writers place the wifely affections. But she had arch distinction of humanity, aloft tended and nursed him in his last from all meaner of heaven's creaillness as the lover of her youth; tures, in the prerogative of tears! and though occasionally she hinted Sooner mayest thou trust thy purse at his faults, she ever spoke of him to a professional pickpocket than as the ornament of all society-poor, give loyal friendship to the man it is true, harassed by unfeeling who boasts of eyes to which the creditors, but the finest of fine gen-tlemen. Lionel had never heard when man weeps he should be alone from her of the ancestral estates -not because tears are weak, but sold for a gambling debt; never from | because they should be sacred. Tears her of the county jail nor the mer- areakin to prayers. Pharisees parade cenary mésalliance. In boyhood, prayer! impostors parade tears. O before we have any cause to be Pegasus, Pegasus-softly, softlyproud of ourselves, we are so proud thou hast harried me off amidst the of our fathers, if we have a decent clouds: drop me gently down— excuse for it. Of his father could Lionel Haughton be proud now? by in the shadowy glen. And Darrell was cognisant of his

CHAPTER VIL

Lionel Haughton, having hitherto much improved his chance of fortune, decides the question, "What will be do with it?"

where," said a well-known voice; are wanted." and a hand rested lightly on Lionel's "What for? I would rather stay Guy Darrell, the last man on earth the sullen tone in which they were he could have desired to see. "Will uttered surveyed Lionel's face for an

"I HAVE been seeking you every- | you come in for a few minutes? you shoulder. The boy looked up, here. Who can want me?" startled, but yet heavily, and saw Darrell, struck by the words, and voluntarily more kind than usual-

"Some one very commonplace, but since the Picts went out of fashion, very necessary to mortals the most sublime. I ought to apologise for his coming. You threatened to leave me vesterday because of a defect in your wardrobe. Mr. Fairthorn wrote to my tailor to hasten hither and repair it. He is here. I commend him to your custom! Don't despise him because he makes for a man of my remote generation. Tailors are keen observers, and do not grow out of date so quickly as politicians."

The words were said with a playful good-humour very uncommon to Mr. Darrell. The intention was obviously kind and kinsmanlike. Lionel sprang to his feet: his lip curled, his eye flashed, and his crest rose.

" No. sir; I will not stoop to this! I will not be clothed by your charity -yours! I will not submit to an implied taunt upon my poor mother's ignorance of the manners of a rank to which she was not born! You said we might not like each other. and if so, we should part for ever. I do not like you, and I will go!" He turned abruptly, and walked to the house-magnanimons. If Mr. Darrell had not been the most singular of men, he might well have been offended. As it was, though few were less accessible to surprise, he was surprised. But offended? Judge for yourself. "I declare." muttered Guy Darrell, gazing on the boy's receding figure,-"I declare that I almost feel as if I could once again be capable of an emotion! I hope I am not going to like that instant, and replied in a voice in- | boy! The old Darrell blood in his veins, surely. I might have spoken as he did at his age, but I must have had some better reason for it. What did I say to justify such an explosion! Quid feci?-ubi lapsus? Gone, no doubt, to pack up his knapsack, and take the Road to Ruin! Shall I let him go? Better for me, if I am really in danger of liking him: and so be at his mercy to sting-what? my heart! I defy him; it is dead. No; he shall not go thus. I am the head of our joint houses. Houses ! I wish he had a house, poor boy! And his grandfather loved me. Let him go! I will beg his pardon first; and he may dine in his drawers if that will settle the matter!".

Thus, no less magnanimous than Lionel, did this misanthropical man follow his ungracious cousin, " Ha!" cried Darrell, suddenly, as, approaching the threshold, he saw Mr. Fairthorn at the dining-room window occupied in nibbing a pen upon an ivory thumb-stall-" I have hit it! That abominable Fairthorn has been shedding its prickles! How could I trust flesh and blood to such a bramble? I'll know what it was this instant!" Vain menace! No sooner did Mr. Fairthorn catch glimpse of Darrell's countenance within ten yards of the porch, than, his conscience taking alarm. he rushed incontinent from the window-the apartment-and, ere Darrell could fling open the door, was lost in some lair-" nullis penetrabilis astris"-in that sponge-like and cavernous abode, wherewith benignant Providence had suited the locality to the creature.

CHAPTER VIII.

New imbroglio in that ever-recurring, never to be settled question, "What will he do with it?"

baffled shrug of the shoulder, Mr. Darrell turned from the diningroom, and passed up the stairs to Lionel's chamber, opened the door quickly, and, extending his hand. said, in that tone which had disarmed the wrath of ambitious factions, and even (if fame lie not) once seduced from the hostile Treasury-bench a placeman's vote, "I must have hurt your feelings, and I come to beg your pardon!" But before this time Lionel's proud heart, in which ungrateful anger could not long find room, had smitten him for so ill a return kindness. And, his wounded egotism appeased by its very outburst, he had called to mind Fairthorn's allusions to Darrell's secret griefsstormy so to have revulsed the currents of a life. And, despite those playfully to him-playfully in order Tears, before refused, now found irresistible way. The hand he could tailor?" not take, but, vielding to his yearning impulse, he threw his arms fairly

WITH a disappointed glare, and a round his host's neck, leant his young cheek upon that granite breast, and sobbed out incoherent words of passionate repentancehonest, venerating affection. Darrell's face changed, looking for a moment wondrous soft-and then, as by an effort of supreme self-control, it became severely placid. He did not return that embrace, but certainly he in no way repelled it: nor did he trust himself to speak till the boy had exhausted the force of his first feelings, and had turned to dry his tears.

Then he said, with a soothing sweetness: "Lionel Haughton, you to well-meant and not indelicate have the heart of a gentleman that can never listen to a frank apology for unintentional wrong, but what it springs forth to take the blame to itself, and return apology tenfold. griefs that must have been indeed Enough! A mistake, no doubt, on both sides. More time must elapse before either can truly say that he griefs, the great man had spoken does not like the other. Meanwhile," added Darrell, with almost to make light of obligations. So a laugh—and that concluding query when Guy Darrell now extended showed that even on trifles the man that hand, and stooped to that was bent upon either forcing or apology, Lionel was fairly overcome, stealing his own will upon others,-" meanwhile, must I send away the little from the other. It was the study; necessarily not so profound habit of Darrell, if he went late to in each section as that of a special rest, to rise early. He never allowed professor, but if the science was himself more than five hours' sleep. often on the surface, the thoughts A man greater than Guy Darrell- he deduced from what he knew Sir Walter Raleigh - carved from were as often original and deep. A the solid day no larger a slice for Morpheus. And it was this habit one day to Lionel in his careless perhaps, yet more than temperance manner, but pointed diction, may in diet, which preserved to Darrell his remarkable youthfulness of as- and its results: "Never think it pect and frame, so that at fifty-two he looked, and really was, younger started by another mind, till you than many a strong man of thirty- have deduced from it a corollary of five. For certain it is, that on en- your own." tering middle life, he who would keep his brain clear, his step elastio. his muscles from fleshiness, his nerves from tremor-in a word, retain his youth in spite of the register -should beware of long slumbers. Nothing ages like laziness. The hours before breakfast Darrell devoted first to exercise, whatever the weather-next to his calm scientific pursuits. At ten o'clock punctually he rode out alone, and seldom returned till late in the afternoon. Then he would stroll forth with Lionel into devious woodlands, or lounge with him along the margin of the lake, or lie down on the tedded grass, call the boy's attention to the insect populace which sports out its happy life in the summer months. and treat of the ways and habits of each varying species, with a quaint learning, half humorous, half grave. He was a minnte observer, and an accomplished naturalist. His range of knowledge was, indeed, amazingly

I need not repeat Lionel's answer.

CHAPTER IX.

Darrell: mystery in his past life. What has he done with it?

Some days passed—each day varying | his best years in a dry and absorbing maxim of his, which he dropped out perhaps illustrate his own practice enough to have solved the problem After dinner, which was not over

till past eight o'clock, they always adjourned to the library, Fairthorn vanishing into a recess, Darrell and Lionel each with his several book, then an air on the flute, and each to his own room before eleven. No life could be more methodical; yet to Lionelit had an animating charm. for his interest in his host daily increased, and varied his thoughts with perpetual occupation. Darrell, on the contrary, while more kind and cordial, more cautiously on his guard not to wound his young guest's susceptibilities than he had been before the quarrel and its reconciliation. did not seem to feel for Lionel the active interest which Lionel felt for him. He did not, as most clever men are apt to do in their intercourse with yonth, attempt to draw him out, plumb his intellect, or guide his tastes. If he was at times instructive, it was because talk fell on subjects on which it pleased himlarge for a man who has had to pass | self to touch, and in which he could structing. Nor did he ever allure the boy to talk of his school-days, of his friends, of his predilections, his hopes, his future. In short, had you observed them together, you would have never supposed they were connections-that one could and ought to influence and direct the career of the other. You would have said the host certainly liked the guest, as any man would like a promising, warm - hearted, highspirited, graceful boy, under his own roof for a short time, but who felt that that boy was nothing to himwould soon pass from his eye-form friends, pursuits, aims-with which he could be in no way commingled. for which he should be wholly irresponsible. There was also this peculiarity in Darrell'sconversation; if he never spoke of his guest's past and future, neither did he ever do more than advert in the most general terms to his own. Of that grand stage, on which he had been so hrilthe modes by which he had studied. causes he had gained, or the dehates rural life so copiously and so innoif it had left to him no memory, the -the what shall be. We fold our not speak without involuntarily in-| future as if it stored for him no desire. But did the past leave no memory? Why then at intervals would the book slide from his eye. the head sink upon the breast, and a shade of unutterable dejection darken over the grand beauty of that strong stern countenance? Still that dejection was not morhidly fed and encouraged, for he would fling it from him with a quick impatient gesture of the head, resume the book resolutely, or change it for another which induced fresh trains of thought, or look over Lionel's shoulder, and make some subtle comment on his choice, or call on Fairthorn for the flute; and in a few minutes the face was severely serene again. And be it here said, that it is only in the poetry of young gentlemen, or the prose of lady novelists, that a man in good health. and of sound intellect, wears the livery of unvarying gloom. However great his causes of sorrow, he does not for ever parade its ostenliant an actor, he imparted no re- tatious mourning, nor follow the miniscences; of those great men, hearse of his hopes with the long the leaders of his age, with whom he face of an undertaker. He will still had mingled familiarly, he told no have his gleams of cheerfulness-his anecdotes. Equally silent was he as moments of good humour. The old to the earlier steps in his career, smile will sometimes light the eye, and awake the old playfulness of the the accidents of which he had seized lip. But what a great and critical advantage-silent there as upon the sorrow does leave behind is often far worse than the sorrow itself has he had adorned. Never could you been. It is a change in the inner have supposed that this man, still in man, which strands him, as Guy the prime of public life, had been Darrell seemed stranded, upon the the theme of journals and the boast shoal of the Present; which the of party. Neither did he ever, as more he strive manfully to bear his men who talk easily at their own hurden, warns him the more from hearths are prone to do, speak of dwelling on the Past; and the more projects in the future, even though impressively it enforce the lesson of the projects be no vaster than the the vanity of human wishes, strikes planting of a tree or the alteration | the more from his reckoning illusive of a parterre-projects with which hopes in the Future. Thus out of our threefold existence two parts cently teems. The past seemed as are annihilated—the what has been arms, stand upon the petty and forenoons to solitary angling, or steep crasstone, which alone looms social intercourse with the swans out of the Measureless Sea, and say and the tame doe. But from some to ourselves, looking neither back- mystic concealment within doors ward nor beyond, "Let us bear would often ficat far into the open what is;" and so for the moment air the melodies of that magio flute; the eye can lighten and the lip can and the boy would glide back, along smile.

from Mr. Fairthorn any stray hints pilastered arcades in the uncomupon the family records. That gen- pleted new one, to listen to the tleman had evidently been repri- sound: listening, he, blissful boy, manded for indiscretion, or warned forgot the present; he seized the against its repetition, and he be- unchallenged royalty of his years. came as reserved and mum as if he For him no rebels in the past conhad just emerged from the cave of spired with poison to the wine-cup, Trophonius. Indeed he shunned murder to the sleep. No deserts in trusting himself again alone to the future, arresting the march of Lionel, and affecting a long arrear ambition, said-"Here are sands of correspondence on behalf of his for a pilgrim, not fields for a conemployer, left the lad during the queror."

the dark-red mournful walls of the Lionel could no longer glean old house, or the futile pomp of

CHAPTER X.

In which chapter the History quietly moves on to the next.

THUS nearly a week had gone, and ride this horse-any one, perhaps, Lionel began to feel perplexed as to that." the duration of his visit. Should he be the first to suggest departure? said Lionel, laughing. Mr. Darrell rescued him from that embarrassment. On the seventh day, Lionel met his host in a lane pleasure," said he in his curt laconic near the house, returning from his diction. "I was in Spain two years habitual ride. The boy walked home ago. I had not an English horse by the side of the horseman, patting there, so I bought that Andalusian the steed, admiring its shape, and jennet. What has served him at praising the beauty of another need, no preux chevalier would leave saddle-horse, smaller and slighter, to the chance of ill-usage. So the which he had seen in the paddock jennet came with me to England exercised by a groom. "Do you You have not been much accusever ride that chestnut? I think it tomed to ride, I suppose?" even handsomer than this," the vanity they flatter. Few can pinched for a whole year to have me

"There speaks the Dare-all!"

The host did not look displeased. "Where no difficulty, there no

" Not much; but my dear mother "Half our preferences are due to thought I ought to learn. She taught at a riding-school during one | compliment," answered Darrell. school vacation."

"Your mother's relations are, I believe, well off. Do they suffer her to pinch ?"

"I do not know that she has relations living; she never speaks of them."

"Indeed!" This was the first question on home matters that Darrell had ever directly addressed to Lionell. He there dropped the subject, and said, after a short pause, "I was not aware that you are a horseman, or I would have asked you to accompany me; will you do so to-morrow, and mount the jennet?"

so much." Darrell turned ahruptly away from the bright, grateful eyes. "I am only sorry," he added, looking aside, "that our excursions can be hut few. On Friday next I shall suhmit to you a proposition; if you accept it, we shall part on Saturday -liking each other, I hope: speaking for myself, the experiment has not failed; and on yours?"

"On mine !-oh, Mr. Darrell, if I dared but tell you what recollections of yourself the experiment will bequeath to me!"

"Do not tell me, if they imply a lions," with the low silvery laugh which so melodiously expressed indifference, and repelled affection. He entered the stable-yard, dismounted; and on returning to Lionel, the sound of the flute stole forth, as if from the eaves of the gabled roof. "Could the pipe of Horace's Faunus be sweeter than that flute?" said Darrell-

" Utcunque dulci, Tyndare, fistula, Valles, &c.

What a lovely ode that is! What knowledge of town life! what susceptibility to the rural! Of all the Latins, Horace is the only one with "Oh, thank you; I should like it whom I could wish to have spent a week. But no! I could not have discussed the brief span of human life with locks steeped in Malobathran balm, and wreathed with that silly myrtle. Horace and I would have quarrelled over the first heady bowl of Massic. We never can quarrel now! Blessed subject and poet-laureate of Queen Proserpine, and, I dare swear, the most gentlemanlike poet she ever received at court, henceforth his task is to uncoil the asps from the hrows of Alecto, and arrest the ambitious Orion from the chase after visionary

CHAPTER XL

Showing that if a good face is a letter of recommendation, a good heart is a letter of credit.

THE next day they rode forth, host | whatever the regard Darrell might and guest, and that ride proved an feel for him, it was a regard apart eventful crisis in the fortune of from that interest which accepts a Lionel Haughton. Hitherto I have responsibility, and links to itself a elaborately dwelt on the fact that, fate. And even if, at moments, the that interest, he had thrust it from out gay anecdotes of his school-days; him. That he meant to be generous was indeed certain, and this he had typically shown in a very trite matter-of-fact way. The tailor, whose visit had led to such perturbation, had received instructions beyond the mere supply of the listening, while he rebuked the raiment for which he had been summoned; and a large patent portmanteau, containing all that might fought the head boy in the school constitute the liberal outfit of a young man in the rank of gentleman, had arrived at Fawley, and amazed and moved Lionel, whom Darrell had by this time thoroughly reconciled to the acceptance of benefits. The gift denoted this: "In recognizing you as kinsman, I shall henceforth provide for you as gentleman." Darrell indeed meditated applying for an appointment in one of the public offices, the settlement of a liberal allowance, and a parting shake of the hand, which should imply, "I have now behaved as becomes me; the rest belongs to you. We may never meet again. There is no reason why this good-by may not be for ever"

But in the course of that ride. Darrell's intentions changed. Wherefore? You will never guess! Nothing so remote as the distance between cause and effect, and the cause for the effect here was-poor little Sophy.

The day was fresh, with a lovely breeze, as the two riders rode briskly over the turf of rolling commons, with the feathery boughs of neighbouring woodlands tossed joyously open loyal features, which might to and fro by the sportive summer wind. The exhilarating exercise and youthful Cavalier. On bounded the air raised Lionel's spirite, and re- Spanish jennet, on rattled the boy leased his tongue from all trammels; rider. He had left school now, in and when a boy is in high spirits, ten his headlong talk; he was describing to one but he grows a frank egotist, his first friendship with Frank feels the teeming life of his indivi- Vance, as a lodger at his mother's: duality, and talks about himself. how example fired him, and he took powerful and wealthy man had felt | Quite unconsciously, Lionel rattled his quarrel with a demoniscal usher: how he ran away : what befell him : how the doctor went after, and brought him back; how splendidly the doctor behaved-neither flogged nor expelled him, but after patient pupil, dismissed the usher, to the joy of the whole academy; how he for calling the doctor a sneak : how. licked twice, he yet fought that head boy a third time and licked him: how, when head boy himself, he had roused the whole school into a civil war, dividing the boys into Cavaliers and Roundheads; how clay was rolled out into cannon-balls and pistol-shot, sticks shaped intoswords; the play-ground disturfed to construct fortifications: how a slovenly stout boy enacted Cromwell; how he himself was elevated into Prince Rupert; and how, reversing all history, and infamously degrading Cromwell. Rupert would not consent to be beaten; and Cromwell at the last, disabled by an untoward blow across the knuckles, ignominiously yielded himself prisoner, was tried by a court-martial, and sentenced to be shot! To all this rubbish did Darrell incline his patient earnot encouraging, not interrupting, but sometimes stifling a sigh at the sound of Lionel's merry laugh, or the sight of his fair face, with heightened glow on its cheeks, and his long silky hair, worthy the name of lovelocks, blown by the wind from the well have graced the portrait of some

to sketch-work and painting: how ! kindly Vance gave him lessons : how | age of Methuselah. I could not paint. at one time he wished to be a painter; a head like Frank Vance." how much the mere idea of such a thing vexed his mother, and how little she was moved when he told her that Titian was of a very ancient family, and that Francis I., archetype of gentlemen, visited Leonardo da Vinci's sick-bed; and that Henry VIII. had said to a pert lord who had snubbed Holbein, "I can make a lord any day, but I cannot make a Holbein;" how Mrs. Hanghton still confounded all painters in the general image of the painter and plumber who had cheated her so shamefully in the renewed windowsashes and redecorated walls, which Time and the four children of an Irish family had made necessary to the letting of the first floor. And these playful allusions to the maternal ideas were still not irreverent. but contrived so as rather to prepossess Darrell in Mrs. Haughton's favour by bringing out traits of a simple natural mother, too prond. what she did, how she worked, so stood, and nodded his head approv- ful look back, the visit to the Cobingly.-"Certainly," he said, speaking almost for the first time, "fame confers a rank above that of gentlemen and of kings; and as soon as she issues her patent of nobility, it matters not a straw whether the recipient be the son of a Bourbon or of a tallow-chandler. But if Fame withhold her patent-if a well-born man paint aldermen, and be not famous (and I daresay you would have been neither a Titian nor a Holbein), why, he might as well be a painter and plumber, and has a cheese, by standing to his post as right, and I respect her."

"Quite right. If I lived to the

"And even he is not famous yet. Never heard of him."

"He will be famous-I am sure of it: and if you lived in London. you would hear of him even now. Oh, sir! such a portrait as he painted the other day! But I must tell you all about it." And therewith Lionel plunged at once, medias res, into the brief broken epic of little Sophy, and the eccentric infirm Belisarius for whose sake she first toiled and then begged; with what artless eloquence he brought ont the colours of the whole storynow its humour, now its pathos; with what beautifying sympathy he adorned the image of the little vagrant girl, with her mien of gentlewoman and her simplicity of child : the river-excursion to Hampton Court; her still delight; how annoyed he felt when Vance seemed ashamed of her before those fine people; the orchard scene in which perhaps, of her only son, not caring he had read Darrell's letter, that, for the time, drove her from the forethat he might not lose caste as a most place in his thoughts: the born Haughton. Darrell under- return home, the parting, her wistbler's next day-even her farewell gift, the nursery poem, with the lines written on the fly-leaf, he had them by heart! Darrell, the grand advocate, felt he could not have produced on a jury, with those elements, the effect which that boynarrator produced on his granite

"And, oh sir!" cried Lionel. checking his horse, and even arresting Darrell's with bold right hand -" ob," said he, as he brought his moist and pleading eyes in full batbetter chance, even of bread and tery upon the shaken fort to which he had mined his way-"oh, sir! gentleman. Mrs. Haughton was you are so wise, and rich, and kind, do rescue that poor child from the penury and hardships of such a life ! leaning upon her arm as his crutch. If you could but have seen and I cannot bear to think of it. I am heard her! She could never have sure I shall meet her again somebeen born to it! You look away- where; and when I do, may I not I offend you! I have no right to write to you, and will you not come tax your benevolence for others; to her help? Do speak-do say but, instead of showering favours 'Yes,' Mr. Darrell." upon me, so little would suffice for her !- if she were but above posi- slightly; he closed his eyes, but for tive want, with that old man (she a moment. There was a short and would not be happy without him), sharp struggle with his better self, safe in such a cottage as you give to and the better self conquered. your own peasants! I am a man, or shall be one soon : I can wrestle puts down his ears-he may do you with the world, and force my way a mischief. Now canter on-you somehow; but that delicate child, a shall be satisfied. Give me a movillage show, or a beggar on the ment to-to unbutton my coat-it high-road !- no mother, no brother, is too tight for me." no one but that broken-down cripple,

The rich man's breast heaved

"Let go my reins-see, my horse

CHAPTER XIL

Guy Darrell gives way to an impulse, and quickly decides what he will do with it.

"LIONEL HAUGHTON," said Guy | father, I should have taken alarm, Darrell regaining his young cousin's and frowned. I should have seen side, and speaking in a firm and the sickly romance, which ends in measured voice, "I have to thank dupes or deceivers. But at your you for one very happy minute; age, yon, hearty, genial, and openthe sight of a heart so fresh in the hearted boy-you, caught but by limpid purity of goodness is a the chivalrous compassion for helpluxury you cannot comprehend less female childhood-oh that you till you have come to my age; were my son-oh that my dear journeyed, like me, from Dan to father's blood were in those knightly Heed me: if you had been half-adozen years older, and this child for whom you plead had been a fair there was manhood in you, when young woman, perhaps just as in- you wrote to fling my churlish nocent, just as charming-more in favours in my teeth - when you peril-my benevolence would have would have left my roof-tree in a lain as dormant as a stone. A young burst of passion which might be man's foolish sentiment for a pretty foolish, but was nobler than the girl. As your true friend, I should wisdom of calculating submissionhave shrugged my shoulders and manhood, but only perhaps man's said, 'Beware!' Had I been your pride as man-man's heart not less Beersheba, and found all barren. veins! I had a son once! God took him;" the strong man's lips quivered - he hurried on. "I felt shown me something far better providing for your education, I than pride: - that nature which certainly thought her relations constitutes the Heroio Tempera- provided for her support. She ment is completed by two attributes never asked me for help there; -unfinching purpose, disinterested and, judging of her hastily, I humanity. I know not yet if you thought she would not have have the first; you reveal to me scrupled to do so, if my help there the second. Yes! I accept the had not been forestalled. You duties you propose to me; I will have made me understand her do more than leave to you the better; and at all events, threechance of discovering this poor fourths of what we are in boyhood child. I will direct my solicitor to most of us owe to our mothers! take the right steps to do so. I will You are frank, fearless, affectionate, see that she is safe from the ills you a gentleman. I respect the mother fear for her. Lionel; more still, I who has such a son." am impatient till I write to Mrs. Haughton. I did her wrong. Re- Darrell's lips, but when he did quarrel with your father, who was others who has not by nature that me. I disliked it in the mother of expression. a boy who had Darrell blood; other cold than winter. To-day you have | reasons too-let them pass. But in

Certainly praise was rare upon member, I have never seen her. I praise, he knew how to do it! resented in her the cause of my And no man will ever command once dear to me. Enough of that, gift! It cannot be learned. Art I disliked the tone of her letters to and experience can only refine its

CHAPTER XIII.

He who sees his heir in his own child, carries his eye over hopes and possessions lying far beyond his gravestone, viewing his life, even here, as a period but closed with a comma. He who sees his heir in another man's child, sees the full stop at the end of the sentence.

LIONEL'S departure was indefinitely | Lionel, were the more difficult to postponed; nothing more was said discern from the vivacity and canevery human being, and which, in would pass over his countenance;

of it. Meanwhile Darrell's manner dour which covered with so smooth towards him underwent a marked and charming a surface a pride change. The previous indifference tremulously sensitive, and an amthe rich kinsman had hitherto bition that startled himself in the shown as to the boy's past life, and hours when solitude and reverie the peculiarities of his intellect and reflect upon the visions of Youth character, wholly vanished. He the giant outline of its own hopes. sought now, on the contrary, to Darrell was not dissatisfied with plumb thoroughly the more hidden the results of his survey; yet often, depths which lurk in the nature of when perhaps most pleased, a shade and had a woman who loved him been by to listen, she would have heard the short slight sigh which came and went too quickly for the duller sense of man's friendship to recognise it as the sound of sorrow.

In Darrell himself, thus insensibly altered. Lionel daily discovered more to charm his interest and deepen his affection. In this man's sight - an impressive, a haunting nature there were, indeed, such face - sweet and gentle, yet with wondrous under-currents of sweet- the high narrow brow and arched ness, so suddenly gushing forth, so nostril of pride, with restless melansuddenly vanishing again! And choly eyes, and an expression that exquisite in him were the traits of revealed the delicacy of intellect. that sympathetic tact which the but not its power. There was world calls fine breeding, but something forlorn, but imposing, in which comes only from a heart at the whole effigy. As you continued once chivalrous and tender, the to look at the countenance, the more bewitching in Darrell from mournful attraction grew upon their contrast with a manner you. Truly a touching and a usually cold, and a bearing so most lovable aspect. Darrell's eyes stamped with masculine, self-willed, moistened. haughty power. Thus days went on as if Lionel had become a very said softly. "All my sacrifices were child of the house. But his sojourn in vain. The race is not to be was in truth drawing near to a rebuilt! No grandchild of yours close not less abrupt and unexpected than the turn in his host's old line! Fairthorn, how can I humours to which he owed the delay of his departure.

One bright afternoon, as Darrell was standing at the window of his private study, Fairthorn, who had crept in on some matter of business. looked at his countenance long and wistfully, and then, shambling up to his side, put one band on his shoulder with a light timid touch, and, pointing with the other to Lionel, who was lying on the grass in front of the casement reading the Faerie Queen, said, "Why do you take him to your heart if he does not comfort it?"

Darrell winced, and answered in the room. Poor Fairthorn; thank you!"

"Thank me !- what for ?"

"For a kind thought. So, then, you like the boy?"

"Mayn't I like him?" asked Fairthorn, looking rather frightened; "surely you do ! "

"Yes, I like him much; I am trying my best to love him. But, but"-Darrell turned quickly, and the portrait of his father over the mantelpiece came full upon his

"Yes, my father, it is so!" he will succeed me-me, the last of the love that boy? He may be my heir, and in his veins not a drop of my father's blood !"

"But he has the blood of your father's ancestors; and why must you think of him as your heir?you, who, if you would but go again into the world, might yet find a fair wi---"

With such a stamp came Darrell's foot upon the floor, that the holy and conjugal monosyllable dropping from Fairthorn's lips was as much cut in two as if a shark had snapt it. Unspeakably frightened, the poor man sidled away, thrust himself behind a tall reading-desk, and, gently, "I did not know you were peering aslant from that covert, whimpered out, "Don't, don't now, don't be so awful; I did not mean to offend, but I'm always saving sohs something I did not mean; and and Fairthorn's flute from behind really you look so young still the boughs of a neighbouring lime-

(coaxingly), and, and---" Darrell, the burst of rage over, had sunk upon a chair, his face bowed over his hands, and his breast heaving as if with suppressed

The musician forgot his fear; he sprang forward, almost upsetting the tall desk; he flung himself on his knees at Darrell's feet, and exclaimed in broken words, "Master, master, forgive me! Beast that I beat me-kick me." Darrell's right hand slid gently from his face, and fell into Fair- boughs in you Druid copse, from thorn's class. "Hush, hush," muttered the man of granite; "one moment, and it side, now out of sight, as if the

but a figure of speech; yet before But still the flute sounds on, and Lionel had finished half the canto still they hear it, softer and softer that was plunging him into fairy- as they go. Hark ! do you not hear land, Darrell was standing by him it-you? with his ordinary tranquil mien; tree was breathing out an air as dulcet as if careless Fanns still piped in Arcady, and Grief were a far dweller on the other side of the mountains, of whom shepherds, reclining under summer leaves, speak as we speak of hydras and unicorns, and things in fable.

On, on swelled the mellow, mellow, witching music; and now the worn man with his secret sorrow. and the boy with his frank glad was! Do look up-do smile or else laugh, are passing away, side by side over the turf, with its starry and golden wild-flowers, under the which they start the ringdovefarther and farther, still side by dense green of the summer had One moment! That might be closed around them like waves.

000 CHAPTER XIV.

There are certain events which to each man's life are as comets to the earth, seemingly strange and erratic portents; distinct from the ordinary lights which guide our course and mark our seasons, yet true to their own laws, potent in their own influences. Philosophy speculates on their effects, and disputes upon their uses; men who do not philosophise regard them as special messengers and bodes of evil.

THEY came out of the little park impossible dream-life that, safe from into a by-lane; a vast tract of com- Time, glides by bower and hall, mon land, yellow with furze, and through magic forests and by witchundulated with swell and hollow, ing caves, in the world of poet-books. spreading in front; to their right And Darrell listened, and the flutethe dark beechwoods, still beneath notes mingled with the atmosphere the weight of the July noon. Lionel faint and far off, like voices from had been talking about the Faerie that world itself. Ouces, knight-errantry, the sweet | Out then they came, this broad waste land before them; and Lionel | would not suffer him to sleep.' To said merrily.

"But this is the very scene! Here the young knight, leaving his father's hall, would have checked his destrier, glancing wistfully now over that green wild which seems so boundless, now to the 'umbrageous horror' of those breathless woodlands, and questioned himself which way to take for adventure."

"Yes." said Darrell, coming out from his long reserve on all that concerned his past life-" Yes, and the gold of the gorse - blossoms tempted me; and I took the waste land." He paused a moment, and renewed: "And then, when I had known cities and men, and snatched romance from dull matter-of-fact, then I would have done as civilization does with romance itself - I would have enclosed the waste land for my own aggrandisement, Look," he continued, with a sweep of the hand round the width of prospect. "all that you see to the verge of the horizon, some fourteen years ago. was to have been thrown into the petty paddock we have just quitted, and serve as park round the house I was then building. Vanity of human wishes! What but the several proportions of their common folly distinguishes the baffled squire from the arrested conqueror? Man's characteristic cerebral organ must certainly be acquisitiveness." "Was it his organ of acquisitiveness that moved Themistocles to boast that 'he could make a small state great ?""

"Well remembered-ingeniously quoted," returned Darrell, with the "Yes, I suspect that the coveting reign at home." organ had much to do with the To build a name was the him say, 'The trophies of Miltiades | wife, of the same age, and almost as build a name, or to create a fortune, are but varying applications of one human passion. The desire of something we have not is the first of our childish remembrances; it matters not what form it takes, what object it longs for: still it is to acquire; it never deserts us while we live."

"And yet, if I might, I should like to ask, what you now desire that you do not possess?"

"I-nothing; but I spoke of the living! I am dead. Only," added Darrell, with his silvery langh, " I say, as poor Chesterfield said before me, 'it is a secret-keep it.' "

Lionel made no reply; the melanoholy of the words saddened him: but Darrell's manner repelled the expression of sympathy or of interest; and the boy fell into conjecture -what had killed to the world this man's intellectual life?

And thus silently they continued to wander on till the sound of the finte had long been lost to their ears. Was the musician playing still !

At length they came round to the other end of Fawley village, and Darrell again became animated.

"Perhaps," said he, returning to the subject of talk that had been abruptly suspended-"Perhaps the love of power is at the origin of each restless courtship of Fortune; yet, after all, who has power with less alloy than the village thane! With so little effort, so little thought, the man in the manor-house can make men in the cottage happier here below, and more fit for a hereafter yonder. In leaving the world I come from contest and pilgrimage, polite bend of his stately head, like onr sires the Crusaders, to

As he spoke, he entered one of the cottages. An old paralytic man was earliest dream of Themistocles, if we seated by the fire, hot though the are to accept the anecdote that makes July sun was out of doors; and his helpless, was reading to him a chap- | have been so happy here!" he said ter in the Old Testament-the fifth chapter in Genesis, containing the genealogy, age, and death of the patriarchs before the Flood. How the faces of the couple brightened when Darrell entered. " Master Guy!" said the old man, tremulously rising. The world-weary orator and lawyer was still Master Guy to him.

"Sit down, Matthew, and let me read you a chapter." Darrell took the Holy Book, and read the Sermon on the Mount. Never had Lionel heard anything like that reading: the feeling which brought out the depth of the sense, the tones, sweeter than the flute, which clothed the divine words in music. As Darrell ceased, some beauty seemed gone from the day. He lingered a few minutes, talking kindly and familiarly, and then turned into another cottage, where lay a sick woman. He listened to her ailments, promised to send her something to do her good from his own stores, cheered up her spirits, and, leaving her happy. turned to Lionel with a glorious smile, that seemed to ask, "And is there not power in this?"

But it was the sad peculiarity of this remarkable man, that all his moods were subject to rapid and seemingly unaccountable variations. It was as if some great blow had fallen on the mainspring of his organisation, and left its original harmony broken up into fragments, each impressive in itself, but running one into the other with an abrupt discord, as a harp played upon by the winds. For, after this evident effort at self-consolation or self-support, in soothing or strengthening others, suddenly Darrell's head fell again upon his breast, and he walked on, up the village lane, heeding no longer either the open doors of exof humble passers-by. "And I could two kinsmen.

suddenly. "Can I not be so yet? Ay, perhaps, when I am thoroughly old-tied to the world but by the thread of an hour. Old men do seem happy: behind them, all memories faint, save those of childhood and sprightly youth; before them, the narrow ford, and the sun dawning up through the clouds on the other shore. 'Tis the critical descent into age in which man is surely most troubled; griefs gone, still rankling; nor, strength yet in his limbs, passion yet in his heart, reconciled to what loom nearest in the prospect-the arm-chair and the palsied head, Well! life is a quaint puzzle. Bits the most incongruous join into each other, and the scheme thus gradually becomes symmetrical and clear: when, lo! as the infant claps his hands, and cries, 'See, see! the puzzle is made out!' all the pieces are swept back into the box-black box with the gilded nails. Lionel, look up; there is our village Church, and here, close at my right, the Churchyard!"

Now while Darrell and his young companion were directing their gaze to the right of the village lane, towards the small grey church towards the sacred burial-ground in which, here and there amongst humbler graves, stood the monumental stone inscribed to the memory of some former Darrell, for whose remains the living sod had been preferred to the family vault: while both slowly neared the funeral spot, and leant, silent and musing, over the rail that fenced it from the animals turned to graze on the sward of the surrounding green,a foot-traveller, a stranger in the place, loitered on the threshold of the small wayside inn, about fifty yards off to the left of the lane, and pectant cottagers, or the salutation looked hard at the still figures of the Turning then to the hostess, who I do, you may be sure," said the was standing somewhat within the threshold, a glass of brandy-andwater in her hand (the third glass that stranger had called for during his half-hour's rest in the hostelry). quoth the man-

"The taller gentleman yonder is surely your squire, is he not? but who is the shorter and younger person ?"

The landlady put forth her head. "Oh! that is a relation of the squire's down on a visit, sir. I heard coachman say that the squire's taken to him hugely; and they do think at the hall that the young gentleman will be his heir."

"Aha!-indeed-his heir! What is the lad's name? What relation can be be to Mr. Darrell?"

"I don't know what relation exactly, sir: but he is one of the Haughtons, and they've been kin to the Fawley folks time out of mind." "Haughton ?-aha! Thank you, ma'am. Change, if you please," The stranger tossed off his dram, and stretched his hand for his change

"Beg pardon, sir, but this must be forring money," said the landlady, turning a five-franc piece on her palm with suspicious ouriosity.

"Foreign! Is it possible?" The stranger dived again into his pocket, and apparently with some difficulty hunted out half-a-crown.

"Sixpence more, if you please, sir: three brandies, and bread-andcheese, and the ale too, sir." "How stupid I am! I thought that French coin was a five-shilling piece. I fear I have no English money about me but this half-crown; and I can't ask you to trust me, as you don't know me."

"Oh, sir, 'tis all one if you know the squire. You may be passing this way again."

" I shall not forget my debt when stranger; and, with a nod, he walked away in the same direction as Darrell and Lionel had already takenthrough a turnstile by a public path that, skirting the churchyard and the neighbouring parsonage, led along a cornfield to the demesnes of Fawley.

The path was narrow, the corn rising on either side, so that two persons could not well walk abreast. Lionel was some paces in advance, Darrell walking slow. The stranger followed at a distance; once or twice he quickened his pace, as if resolved to overtake Darrell; then, apparently, his mind misgave him, and he again fell back. There was something furtive and sinister about the man. could be seen of his face, for he wore a large hat of foreign make, slouched deep over his brow, and his lips and jaw were concealed by a dark and full mustache and beard. As muchof the general outline of the countenance as remained distinguishable was, nevertheless, decidedly handsome; but a complexion naturally rich in colour, seemed to have gained the heated look which comes with the earlier habits of intemperance, before it fades into the leaden hues of the later.

His dress bespoke pretension to a certain rank; but its component parts were strangely ill-assorted, out of date, and out of repair: pearlcoloured trousers, with silk braids down their sides; brodequins to match-Parisian fashion three years back, but the trousers shabby, the braiding discoloured, the brodequins in holes. The coat-once a black evening-dress coat-of a cut a year or two anterior to that of the trousers: satin facings-oloth napless, satin stained. Over all, a sort of summer travelling-cloak, or rather large cape of a waterproof silk, once the extreme mode with the Lions of | gate which opened into the grounds the Chaussée d'Antin whenever they ventured to rove to Swiss cantons or German spas; but which, from a certain dainty effeminacy in its shape and texture, required the minutest elegance in the general costume of its wearer as well as the cleanliest purity in itself. by this traveller, and well-nigh worn out too, the cape became a finery. mournful as a tattered pennon over a wreck.

Yet in spite of this dress, however unbecoming, shabby, obsolete, a second glance could scarcely fail to note the wearer as a man wonderfully well-shaped-tall, slender in the waist, long of limb, but with a girth of chest that showed immense power-one of those rare figures that a female eye would admire for grace - a recruiting sergeant for athletic strength.

But still the man's whole bearing and aspect, even apart from the dismal incongruities of his attire, which gave him the air of a beggared spendthrift, marred the favourable effect that physical comeliness in itself produces. Difficult to describe how-difficult to say why-but there is a look which a man gets, and a gait which he contracts when the rest of mankind cut him; and this man had that look and that gait.

"So, so," muttered the stranger. "That boy his heir?-so, so. How can I get to speak to him? In his own house he would not see me: it must be as now, in the open air: but how catch him alone? and to lurk in the inn, in his own villageperhaps for a day-to watch an occasion; impossible! Besides, where is the money for it? Courage, courage!" He quickened his pace. pushed back his hat. "Courage! Why not now? Now or never!"

While the man thus mutteringly soliloquised, Lionel had reached the the stranger, "Close the gate, sir:

of Fawley, just in the rear of the little lake. Over the gate he swung himself lightly, and, turning back to Darrell, cried, "Here is the doe waiting to welcome you."

Just as Darrell scarcely heeding the exclamation, and with his musing eyes on the ground, approached the gate, a respectful hand opened it wide, a submissive head bowed low, a voice artificially soft faltered forth words, broken and indistinct, but of which those most audible were-" Pardon me-something to communicate-important -hear me."

Darrell started-just as the traveller almost touched him-started -recoiled, as one on whose path rises a wild beast. His bended head became erect, haughty, indignant, defying: but his cheek was nale. and his lip quivered. "You here! You in England-at Fawley! You presume to accost me ! You, sir, you-"

Lionel just caught the sound of the voice as the doe had come timidly up to him. He turned round sharply, and beheld Darrell's stern, imperious countenance, on which, stern and imperious though it was, a hasty glance could discover, at once, a surprise, that almost bordered upon fear. Of the stranger still holding the gate he saw but the back, and his voice he did not hear, though by the man's gesture he was evidently replying. Lionel paused a moment irresolute; but as the man continued to speak, he saw Darrell's face grow paler and paler. and in the impulse of a vague alarm he hastened towards him; but just within three feet of the spot, Darrell arrested his steps.

"Go home, Lionel; this person would speak to me in private." Then, in a lower tone, he said to you are standing upon the land of Fairthorn had Lionel all to himmy fathers. If you would speak self, and having within the last few with me, this way;" and, brushing days reindulged in open cordiality through the corn. Darrell strode to the young guest, he was espetowards a patch of waste land that cially communicative that evening. adjoined the field: the man followed He talked much on Darrell, and him, and both passed from Lionel's with all the affection that, in spite eyes. The doe had come to the of his fear, the poor flute-player felt gate to greet her master; she now for his ungracious patron. He told rested her nostrils on the bar, with many anecdotes of the stern man's a look disappointed and plaintive.

"Come," said Lionel, "come." The doe would not stir.

So the boy walked on alone, not man's sternness where some obstimuch occupied with what had just passed. "Donbtless," thought he, "some person in the neighbourhood upon country business."

hurried past him without speaking, human beings. But-" and entered the house.

The host did not appear at dinner, and Darrell's voice called out, nor all that evening. Mr. Mills "Fairthorn, let me speak with made an excuse-Mr. Darrell did you." not feel very well.

tender kindness to all that came within its sphere. He told also anecdotes more striking of the kind nate prejudice, some ruling passion. made him "granite."

"Lord, my dear young sir," said Fairthorn, "be his most bitter open He skirted the lake, and seated enemy, and fall down in the mire, himself on a garden bench near the the first hand to help you would be house. What did he there think Guy Darrell's; but be his professed of?-who knows? Perhaps of the friend, and betray him to the worth Great World; perhaps of little of a straw, and never try to see his Sophy! Time fled on: the sun was face again if you are wise-the most receding in the west, when Darrell forgiving and the least forgiving of

The study door noiselessly opened,

CHAPTER XV.

Every street has two sides, the shady side and the sunny. When two men shake hands and part, mark which of the two takes the sunny side; he will be the younger man of the two.

THE next morning, neither Darrell | with a sentiment of mingled curinor Fairthorn appeared at breakfast; osity and awe. Nothing in it rebut as soon as Lionel had concluded markable, save the portrait of the that meal, Mr. Mills informed him, host's father over the mantelpiece. with customary politeness, that Mr. Books strewed tables, chairs, and Darrell wished to speak with him floors in the disorder loved by hain the study. Study, across the bitual students. Near the window threshold of which Lionel had never was a glass bowl containing goldyet set footstep! He entered it now fish, and close by, in its cage, a singa bird-even a fish.

less melody of voice.

"Yes," he said, in answer to Lionel's really anxious inquiry; "I am ill. Idle persons like me give reasonable; but I am a strange way to illness. When I was a busy man, I never did; and then illness heirs of my own. Eh, sir-why gave way to me. My general plans not?" Darrell spoke these last are thus, if not actually altered at words almost fiercely, and fixed his least hurried to their consummation eyes on Lionel as he repeatedsooner than I expected. Before you came here. I told you to come soon, boy's face evinced no surprise, the or you might not find me. I meant expression of his own relaxed, and to go abroad this summer; I shall he continued calmly - "Enough; now start at once. I need the change of scene and air. You will kindly meant. It is a treason to a return to London to-day."

with me?" "Angry! boy, and cousin-no!" resumed Darrell, in a tone of un- and lighthearted. If sorrow reach farewells. You must wish, too, to Tut, tut." see your mother, and thank her for "It is your goodness," faltered rearing you up so that you may Lionel. "I cannot belp it. And is step from poverty into ease with a there nothing I can do for you in head erect. You will give to Mrs. return?" Haughton this letter: for yourself. your inclinations seem to tend to- free from stain, and your heart open wards the army. But before you to such noble emotions as awaken decide on that career, I should like tears like those. Ah, by the by, I his address. He will receive by to- success. You shall know the moday's post a note from me, requesting | ment I hear more." him to advise you. Follow his counsels in what belongs to the and I may write to you?" world. He is a man of the world -a distant connection of mine- direct to me here." who will be kind to you for my ing-bird. Darrell might exist with- sake. Is there more to say? Yes. out companionship in the human It seems an ungracious speech; but species, but not without something I should speak it. Consider yourwhich he protected and cherished- self sure from me of an independent income. Never let idle sycophants Darrell looked really ill: his keen lead you into extravagance, by telleye was almost dim, and the lines ing you that you will have more. in his face seemed deeper. But he But indulge not the expectation, spoke with his usual calm, passion- however plausible, that you will be my heir."

"Mr. Darrell-oh, sir-"

"Hush-the expectation would be being. I might marry again-have "Why not?" But seeing that the what I have thus rudely said was young man to let him count on a "To-day! You are not angry fortune which at last is left away from him. Now. Lionel, go; enjoy your spring of life! Go, hopeful usual tenderness. "Angry - fie! you, battle with it; if error mislead But since the parting must be, 'tis you, come fearlessly to me for counwell to abridge the pain of long sel. Why boy-what is this-tears?

"Yes, much. Keep your name you to see something more of the heard from my lawyer to-day about world. Call to-morrow on Colonel your poor little protégée. Not found Morley, in Curzon Street: this is yet, but he seems sanguine of quick

"You will write to me then, sir,

"As often as you please. Always

"Shall you be long abroad?"

know," said he, curtly. "Adieu."

He opened the door as he spoke. Lionel looked at him with wistful yearning, filial affection, through breast, Darrell paced the room with passed away.

from me!" said Darrell to himself, cess seemed at length fully to satisfy as he turned back, and stood on his him, for his conntenance gradually solitary hearth. "But they on whose cleared, and a triumphant smile heads I once poured a blessing, where passed across it. "A lie-certainly are they-where? And that man's a palpable and gross lie; lie it must tale, reviving the audacious fable and shall be. Never will I accent which the other, and I verily believe it as truth. Father " (looking full at the less guilty knave of the two, the portrait over the mantel-shelf), sought to palm on me years ago! "father, fear not—never—never!"

Darrell's brows met. "I don't Stop; let me weigh well what he said. If it were true! Oh, shame, shame!"

Folding his arms tightly on his his swimming eyes. "God bless slow, measured strides, pondering you, sir," he murmured, simply, and deeply. He was, indeed, seeking to suppress feeling, and to exercise only "That blessing should have come judgment; and his reasoning pro-

BOOK III - CHAPTER I.

Certes, the Lizard is a shy and timorous creature. He runs into chinks and craunies if you come too near to him, and sheds his very tail for fear, if you catch it by the tip. He has not his being in good society-no one cages him, no one pets. He is an idle vagrant. But when he steals through the green herbage, and basks unmolested in the sun, he crowds perhaps as much enjoyment into one summer hour as a parrot, however pampered and erudite, spreads over a whole drawingroom life spent in saying, "How d'ye do ?" and "Pretty Poll,"

On that dull and sombre summer morning in which the grandfather swered Sophy; and her under-lip and grandchild departed from the slightly pouted, while the big tear friendly roof of Mr. Merle, very dull swelled to her eye. and very sombre were the thoughts of little Sophy. She walked slowly behind the grey oripple who had need to lean so heavily on his staff. and her eye had not even a smile for the golden buttercups that glittered on dewy meads alongside the heart deliberately to yex you?" barren road.

and silent till they had passed the were perhaps yet more dreary than those of the dejected ohild, halted abruptly, passed his hand once or her face with great kindness as she came slowly to his side.

"You are sad, little one?" said he. "Very sad, Grandy."

him again."

"It was not like you, Grandy," an-

"True," said the vagabond; "anything resembling common sense is not like me. But don't you think that I did what I felt was best for you? Must I not have some good cause for it, whenever I have the Sophy took his hand and pressed Thus had they proceeded apart it, but she could not trust herself to speak, for she felt that at such effort second milestone. There, Waife, she would have burst out into hearty rousing from his own reveries, which crying. Then Waife proceeded to utter many of those wise sayings, old as the hills, and as high above our sorrows as hills are from the twice rapidly over his forehead, and, valley in which we walk. He said turning round to Sophy, looked into how foolish it was to unsettle the mind by preposterous fancies and impossible hopes. The pretty young gentleman could never be anything to her, nor she to the pretty young "And displeased with me? Yes, gentleman. It might be very well displeased that I have taken you for the pretty young gentleman to suddenly away from the pretty promise to correspond with her, but young gentleman who was so kind as soon as he returned to his friends to you, without encouraging the he would have other things to think chance that you were to meet with of, and she would soon be forgotten; while she, on the contrary, would be

and the butterflies, and find hard life still more irksome. Of all this, and much more, in the general way of consolers who set out on the principle that grief is a matter of logic, did Gentleman Waife deliver himself with a vigour of ratiocination which admitted of no reply, and conveyed not a particle of comfort. And feeling this, that great Actor-not that he was acting then-suddenly stopped, clasped the child in his arms, and murmured in broken accents-" But if I see you thus cast down, I shall have no strength left to hobble on through the world; Him; for I have no dreadful Mrs. and the sooner I lie down, and the dust is shovelled over me, why, the better for you; for it seems that Heaven sends you friends, and I tear you from them."

And then Sophy fairly gave way to her sobs: she twined her little arms round the old man's neck convulsively, kissed his rough face with imploring pathetic fondness, and forced out through her tears, "Don't talk so! I've been ungrateful and wicked. I don't care for any one but my own dear, dear Grandy."

After this little scene, they both composed themselves, and felt much lighter of heart. They pursued their journey, no longer apart, but side by side, and the old man leaning, though very lightly, on the child's arm. But there was no immediate reaction from gloom to gaiety. Waife began talking in softened undertones, and vaguely, of his own past afflictions: and partial as was the reference, how vast did the old man's sorrows seem beside the child's regrets; and yet he commented on them as if rather in pitying her state than grieving for his own.

"Ah, at your age, my darling, I had not your troubles and hardships. I had not to trudge these dusty roads on foot with a broken-down stray back into the high-road, you thinking of him, and the Thames | good-for-nothing scatterling. I trod rich carpets, and slept under silken curtains. I took the air in gay carriages-I such a scapegrace-and you little child-you so good! All gone, all melted away from me, and not able now to be sure that you will have a crust of bread this day week."

"Oh, yes! I shall have bread, and you too, Grandy," cried Sophy, with cheerful voice, "It was you who taught me to pray to God, and said that in all your troubles God had been good to you; and He has been so good to me since I prayed to Crane to beat me now, and say things more hard to bear than beating - and you have taken me to yourself. How I prayed for that, And I take care of you too, Grandy, -don't I? I prayed for that too; and as to carriages," added Sophy, with superb air, "I don't care if I am never in a carriage as long as I live; and you know I have been in a van, which is bigger than a carriage, and I didn't like that at all, But how came people to behave so ill to you. Grandy?" "I never said people behaved ill to me, Sophy." "Did not they take away the carpets and silk curtains, and all the fine things you had as a little boy?" "I don't know," replied Waife, with a puzzled look, "that people actually took them away-but they melted away. However, I had much still to be thankful for-I was so strong, and had such high spirits. Sophy, and found people not behaving ill to me-quite the contrary -so kind. I found no Crane (she monster) as you did, my little angel. Such prospects before me, if I had walked straight towards them. But I followed my own fancy, which led me zigzag; and now that I would tice of the Peace could send to the way back from-it does not signify treadmill for presuming to live with- from what, or from whence, but I out a livelihood." SOPHY .- " Not without a livelihood !- the what did you call it ?-

Three Pounds, Grandy?" WAIFE (admiringly) .- "Sensible me." child. That is true. Yes, Heaven is very good to me still. Ah! what signifies fortune? How happy I was with my dear Lizzy, and yet no Rugge's principal actor was taken two persons could live more from off hy delirium tremens, which is hand to mouth."

SOPHY (rather "Lizzy?"

looking down). - "My wife. She struck me. Once in my day I had was only spared to me two years- heen used to acting. I offered to such sunny years! And how grate- try my chance on Mr. Rugge's stage; ful I ought to be that she did not he caught at me-I at him. I suclive longer. She was saved-such- ceeded; we came to terms, and my long pause. Waife resumed, with a rush from memory, as if plucking himself from caps and read their Bihle. Is not the claws of a harpy-" What's the good of looking back? A man's gone self is a dead thing. It is not I-now tramping this road, with all that for my sake?" you to lean upon - whom I see, when I would turn to look behind hesides, I must have done someon that which I once was-it is another being, defunct and buried: and when I say to myself, 'that actually happy, but comfortable and being did so and so,' it is like reading an epitaph on a tombstone. So. at last, solitary and hopeless, I came back to my own land; and I found you-a blessing greater than I had ever dared to count on. And how was I to maintain you, and take you most disliked and dreaded, and never from that long-nosed alligator called would have thought of but that I Crane, and put you in womanly fancied it might he a help to you-I gentle hands? for I never thought mean the London stage-and had then of subjecting you to all you that bad accident on the railway, have since undergone with me. I how did it end? Oh! in saving who did not know one useful thing you" (and Waife closed his eyes and in life by which a man can turn a shuddered)-"in saving your destiny penny. And then, as I was all from what might be much worse for

see before you a man whom a Jus- | alone in a village alchouse, on my was disappointed and despairing-Providence mercifully threw in my way-Mr. Rugge-and ordained me independent income -that is, the to be of great service to that ruffian -and that ruffian of great use to SOPHY .- "Ah, how was that?" WAIFE .- "It was fair-time in the village wherein I stopped, and Latin for a disease common to men jealously). - who eat little and drink much. Rugge came into the alchouse be-WAIFE (with moistened eyes, and moaning his loss. A hright thought such-such shame and misery!" A little Sophy was thus taken from that ringleted crocodile, and placed with Christian females who wore Heaven good to us, Sophy-and to me too-me, such a scamp!"

"And you did all that-suffered

"Suffered-but I liked it. And. thing; and there were reasons-in short. I was quite happy-no, not merry. Providence gives thick hides to animals that must exist in cold climates; and to the man whom it reserves for sorrow, Providence gives a coarse, jovial temper. Then, when hy a mercy I was saved from what I you, body and sonl, than the worst | there you will learn what I have that has happened to you with me. done with the Three Pounds!" And so we have been thrown together; and so you have supported Grandy?" me; and so, when we could exist without Mr. Rugge, Providence got rid of him for us. And so we are now walking along the high-road: and through yonder trees you can acquisition proved a monstrous-" catch a peep of the roof under which

"It is not the Spotted Boy,

"No," said Waife, sighing; "the Spotted Boy is a handsome income; but let us only trust in Providence. and I should not wonder if our new " Monstrous!"

" Piece of good fortune," we are about to rest for a while; and

CHAPTER II.

The Investment revealed.

GENTLEMAN WAIFE passed through man, entered the sanded kitchen. a turnstile, down a narrow lane, ascended a stair that led from it: glad you are come. I'se most afeared he he dead "

"Dead!" exclaimed Waife. "Oh. Sophy, if he should be dead." " Who?"

Waife did not heed the question. dead?" said he, fumbling in his pockets, from which he at last produced a key. "You have not been disobeying my strict orders, and tampering with the door?" "Lor' love ye, no, sir. But he made such a noise a fust-awful! And now he's as still as a corpse. And I did peep through the keyhole, and he was stretched stark."

Sophy." He put aside the wo- shaggy locks an enormous-and reached a solitary cottage. He and Sophy following, stopped at a knocked at the door; an old peasant- door and listened; not a sound. woman opened it, and dropped him Timidly he unlocked the portals and a civil curtsy. "Indeed, sir, I am crept in, when, suddenly, such a rush-such a spring, and a mass of something vehement vet soft, dingy yet whitish, whirled past the actor, and came pounce against Sophy. who therewith uttered a shriek. "Stop him, stop him, for heaven's "What makes you think him sake," cried Waife. "Shut the door below - seize him." Down-stairs. however, went the mass, and downstairs after it hobbled Waife, returning in a few moments with the recaptured and mysterious fugitive. "There," he cried triumphantly to Sophy, who, standing against the wall with her face buried in her frock, long refused to look up-"there-tame as a lamb, and knows "Hunger, perhaps," said the Co- me. See"-he seated himself on the median; "'tis his way when he floor, and Sophy, hesitatingly openhas been kept fasting much over ing her eyes, beheld gravely gazing his usual hours. Follow me, at her from under a profusion of Denouement !

CHAPTER IIL

Poodle!

CHAPTER IV.

Zoology in connection with History.

walk, I say." The poodle slowly rose Grandy," said Sophy's voice from on his hind-legs, and, with an aspect the foot of the stairs. inexpressibly solemn, advanced tohad been confined.

"Makeabow-no-a bow, sir; that is right: you can shake hands another time. Run down, Sophy, and ask for his dinner."

flow down the stairs

The dog, still on his hind-legs, stood in the centre of the floor, dignified, but evidently expectant. "That will do: lie down and die.

Die this moment, sir." The dog mate friendship which is the natural stretched himself out, closed his relation between child and dog. eyes, and to all appearance gave up vestment," said Waife, with enthu- -the INVESTMENT?" siasm; "and, upon the whole, dog chean.-Ho! you are not to bring first that the woman is not listening. no his dinner : it is not you who are Lie down, sir, there, at the feet of to make friends with the dog; it is the young lady. Good dog. How my little girl; send her up; Sophy, Sophy."

woman, holding a plate of canine into the tobacconist's. While I was comestibles; "but lauk, sir; ben't he buying my ounce of canaster, that really dead?"

"Sophy, Sophy,"

"WALK to that young lady, sir- Please let me stay, here,

"Nonsense! it is sixteen hours wards Sophy, who hastily receded since he has had a morsel to eat, into the room in which the creature And he will never bite the hand that feeds him now. Come up. I say." Sophy slowly reascended, and Waife, summoning the poodle to life, insisted upon the child's feeding him. And indeed, when that "Yes-that I will;" and Sophy act of charity was performed, the dog evinced his gratitude by a series of unsophisticated bounds and waggings of the tail, which gradually removed Sophy's apprehensions, and laid the foundations for that inti-

"And how did you come by him ?" the ghost. "A most splendid in- asked Sophy; "and is this really the

"Shut the door carefully, but see did I come by him? I will tell you. The first day we arrived at the vil-"She be fritted, sir," said the lage which we have just left, I went dog entered the shop. In his mouth was a sixpence wrapped in paper.

He lifted himself on his hind-legs, a great many tricks, and is quite and laid his missive on the counter. The shopwoman-you know her. Mrs. Traill-unfolded the paper and read the order. 'Clever dog that, sir,' said she, 'To fetch and carry?' said I, indifferently. 'More than that, sir; you shall see. The order is for two penn'orth of snuff. The dog knows he is to take back four-I will give him a penny short.' So she took the sixpence and gave the dog threepence out of it. The dog shook his head and looked gravely into her face. 'That's all you'll get,' said she. The dog shook his head again, and tapped his paw once on the counter, as much as to say, 'I'm not to be done-a penny more, if you please.' 'If you'll not take that, you shall have nothing,' said Mrs. Traill, and she took back the threepence."

"Dear! and what did the dog do

then-snarl or bite?" "Not so; he knew he was in his rights, and did not lower himself hy showing had temper. Thedog looked quietly round, saw a hasket which contained two or three pounds of candles lying in a corner for the shopboy to take to some customer: took up the basket in his mouth, and turned tail, as much as to say, 'Tit for tat then.' He understood. reprisals.' 'Come hack this moment,' cried Mrs. Traill. The dog walked out of the shop; then she ran after him, and counted the fourpence before him, on which he dropped the basket, picked up the right change, and went off demurely. man,' said Mrs. Trail; 'I wish it was | minoes." in better hands,' 'So do I, ma'am,' answered I ;- 'did he teach it?' 'No. it was taught hy his brother, who was an old soldier, and died in his house two weeks ago. It knows young. It might make a fortune as a show, sir.' So I was thinking. I inquired the owner's address, called on him, and found him disposed to sell the dog. But he asked £3, a sum that seemed out of the question then. Still I kept the dog in my eye; called every day to make friends with it, and ascertain its capacities. And at last, thanks to you, Sophy, I bought the dog; and what is more, as soon as I had two golden sovereigns to show, I got him for that sum, and we have still £1 left (besides small savings from our lost salaries) to go to the completion of his education, and the advertisement of his merits. I kept this a secret from Merle-from all. I would not even let the drunken owner know where I took the dog to yesterday. I hrought him here, where, I learned in the village, there were two rooms to let-locked him up-and my story is told."

"But why keep it such a secret?" "Because I don't want Rugge to trace us. He might do one a mischief; hecause I have a grand project of genteel position and high prices for the exhibition of that dog. And why should it be known where we come from, or what we were? And because, if the owner you see, what is called 'the law of knew where to find the dog, he might decoy it back from us. Luckily he had not made the dog so fond of him, hut what, unless it be decoyed, it will accustom itself to us. And now I propose that we should stay a week or so here, and devote ourselves exclusively to de-'To whom does that poodle be- veloping the native powers of this long?' said I. 'To a poor drunken gifted creature. Get out the do-

> "What is his name?" " Ha! that is the first consideration. What shall be his name?" " Has he not one already?"

"Yes-trivial and unattractive-

Mop! In private life it might pass. | self appealed to, rose and stretched But in public life - give a dog a himself. bad name and hang him. Mon.

indeed!" Therewith Mop, considering him- require it.'

"Right," said Gentleman Waife: "stretch yourself; you decidedly

CHAPTER V.

Mop becomes a personage. Much thought is bestowed on the verbal dignities. without which a Personage would become a Mop. The importance of names is apparent in all history. If Augustus had called himself king, Rome would have riscu against him as a Tarquin; so he remained a simple equestrian, and modestly called himself Imperator. Mop chooses his own title in a most mysterious manner, and ceases to be Mop.

"THE first noticeable defect in your name of Mop," said Gentleman Waife, "is, as you yourself denote, the want of elongation. Monosyllables are not imposing, and in striking compositions their meaning is elevated by periphrasis; that is to say, Sophy, that what before was a short truth, an elegant author elaborates into a long stretch."

"Certainly," said Sophy, thoughtfully: "I don't think the name of Mon would draw! Still he is very like a Mop." "For that reason the name degrades him the more, and lowers him from an intellectual phenomenon to a physical attribute, which is vulgar. I hope that that dog will enable us to rise in the Scale of Being. For whereas we in acting could only command a threepenny audience-reserved seats a shilling -- ho may aspire to halfcrowns and dress-boxes; that is, if we can hit on a name which inspires respect. Now, although the dog is big, it is not by his size that he is to become famous, or we might call him Hercules or Goliah; nei- Socrates-prosy!" ther is it by his beauty, or Adonis | SOPHY .- "Ah, Mr. Merle's book would not be unsuitable. It is by his superior sagacity and wisdom. And there I am puzzled to find his prototype amongst mortals; for. perhaps, it may be my ignorance of history-"

"You ignorant, indeed, grandfather !"

"But considering the innumerable millions who have lived on the earth, it is astonishing how few I can call to mind who have left behind them a proverbial renown for wisdom. There is, indeed, Solomon, but he fell off at the last; and as he belongs to sacred history, we must not take a liberty with his name. Who is there very, very wise, besides Solomon? Think, Sophy-Profane History." SOPHY (after a musing pause) .-

" Puss in Boots." "Well, he was wise; but then he was not human; he was a cat, Ha! Socrates. Shall we call him Socrates, Socrates, Socrates?" SOPHY .- " Socrates, Socrates."

Mop yawned. WAIFE. - "He don't take to about the Brazen Head, Friar contrived to produce great men Bacon! He must have been very without it, Waife passed by that wise."

WAIFE .- " Not bad; mysterious, hut not recondite; historical, yet familiar. What does Mon say to it? Friar, Friar, Friar Bacon, sir,-Friar."

SOPHY (coaxingly) .- "Friar." Mop, evidently conceiving that appeal is made to some other personage, canine or human, not present, rouses up, walks to the door, smells at the chink, returns, shakes his head, and rests on his haunches, eyeing his two friends superciliously.

SOPHY .- " He does not take to that name.

WAIFE .- "He has his reasons for it; and indeed there are many worthy persons who disapprove of anything that sayours of magical practices. Mop intimates that, on entering public life, one should beware of offending the respectable prejudices of a class."

Mr. Waife then, once more resorting to the recesses of scholastic memory, plucked therefrom, somewhat by the head and shoulders, sundry names reverenced in a bygone age. He thought of the seven wise men of Greece, hat could only recall the nomenclature of two out of the seven-a sad proof of the distinction between collegiate fame and popular renown. He called Thales; he called Bion. Mop made no response, "Wonderful intelligence!" said Waife; "he knows that Thales and Bion would not draw !--ohsolete."

Mop was equally mute to Aristotle. He pricked up his ears at Plato. perhaps because the sound was not wholly dissimilar from that of Ponto-a name of which he might have had vague reminiscences. The Romans, not having cultivated an original philosophy, though they Cocker dear."

perished people. He crossed to China, and tried Confucius, Mon had evidenly never heard of

"I am at the end of my list, so far as the wise men are concerned." said Waife, wiping his forehead, "If Mop were to distinguish himself by valour, one would find heroes by the dozen-Achilles, and Hector, and Julius Cæsar, and Pompey, and Bonaparte, and Alexander the Great, and the Duke of Marlborough. Or, if he wrote poetry, we could fit him to a hair. But wise men certainly are scarce, and when one has hit on a wise man's name, it is so little known to the vulgar that it would carry no more weight with it than Spot or Tohy. But necessarily some name the dog must have, and take to, sympathetically."

Sophy meanwhile had extracted the dominoes from Waife's hundle. and with the dominoes an alphabet and a multiplication-table in printed capitals. As the Comedian's one eye rested upon the last, he exclaimed, "But after all, Mop's great strength will probably be in arithmetic, and the science of numbers is the root of all wisdom. Besides. every man, high and low, wants to make a fortune, and associations connected with addition and multiplication are always pleasing. Who, then, is the sage at computation most universally known? Unquestionably Cocker! He must take to that - Cocker, Cocker" (commandingly) - "C-o-c-k-e-r" (with persuasive sweetness).

Mop looked puzzled; he put his head first on one side, then the other.

SOPHY (with mellifluous endearment). - " Cocker, good Cocker;

Excited and bewildered, Mop put up his head, and gave vent to his perplexities in a long and lugubrious howl, to which certainly none who heard it could have desired addition or multiplication.

"Stop this instant, sir-stop; I shoot you! You are dead-down!" Waife adjusted his staff to his times two?" Mon deliberately shoulder gnn-wise; and at the word of command, Down, Mop was on his side, stiff and lifeless. "Still," said Waife, "a name connected with profound calculation would be the most appropriate; for instance, Sir Isaac-

Before the Comedian could get out the word Newton, Mop had sprung to his four feet, and, with wagging tail and wriggling back, evinced a sense of beatified recognition.

"Astounding!" said Waife, rather "Can it be the name? - Impossible. Sir Isaac, Ismao!"

"Bow wow!" answered Mop, joyously.

" If there be any truth in the doctrine of metempsychosis," faltered Gentleman Waife, "if the great Newton could have transmigrated into that incomparable animal! Newton, Newton!" To that name Mop made no obeisance, but, evidently still restless, walked round the room, smelling at every corner, and turning to look back with inquisitive earnestness at his new master.

"He does not seem to catch at the name of Newton," said Waife, trying it thrice again, and vainly, "and yet he seems extremely well versed in the principle of gravity. Sir Isaac!" The dog bounded towards him, put his paws on his shoulder, and licked bis face. "Just cut out those figures get him to tell us how much twice most abstruse could not accurately

BOTH .- "Cocker, Cocker, Cocker!" | ten are-I mean by addressing him as Sir Isaac."

Sophy cut the figures from the multiplication-table, and arranged them, at Waife's instruction, in a circle on the floor. "Now, Sir Isaac." Mop lifted a paw, and walkeddeliberately round the letters. "Now, Sir Isaac, how much are ten made his survey and calculation, and, pausing at twenty, stooped, and took the letters in his mouth.

"It is not natural," cried Sophy. much alarmed. "It must be wicked, and I'd rather have nothing to do with it, please." "Silly child. He was but obeying my sign. He had been taught that trick already under the name of Mop. The only strange thing is, that he should do it also under the name of Sir Isaac, and much more cheerfully too. However, whether he has been the great Newton or not, a live dog is better than a dead lion. But it is clear that, in acknowledging the name of Sir Isaac, he does not encourage us to take that of Newton-and he is right; for it might be thought unbecoming to apply to an animal, however extraordinary, who by the severity of fortune is compelled to exhibit his talents for a small pecuniary reward, the family name of so great a Philosopher. Sir Isaac, after all, is a vague appellation-any dog has a right to be Sir Isaac-Newton may be left conjectural. Let us see if we can add to our arithmetical information. Look at me, Sir Isaac." Sir Isaac looked and grinned affectionately; and under that title learned a new combination with a facility that might have relieved Sophy's mind of all superstitious belief that the philosopher was resuscitated in the dog, had she known that in life that carefully, my dear, and see if we can great master of calculations the

it is solving the laws that link the stars to infinity! But revenous à nos moutons, what was the astral atreminiscences of Mop to the cognominal distinction of Sir Isaac? I subtle treatise upon this query, enlivened by quotations from the and Proclus-as well as by a copious modern Spiritualists, from Sir Ke-Monsieur Cahagnet and Judge Edwards: it was to be called Inquiry into the Law of Affinities, by Philomopsos: when, unluckily for my treatise. I arrived at the knowledge which it was based. The baptismal name of the old soldier. Mon's first most endeared associations. His towards ripening his scholastic edu-&c. Stilled was that name when the Mops.

cast up a simple sum in addition. | old soldier died; but when heard Nothing brought him to the end of again, Mop's heart was moved, and his majestic tether like dot and carry in missing the old master, he felt one. Notable type of our human more at home with the new. As incompleteness, where men might for the title, "Sir," it was a mere deem our studies had made us most expletive in his ears. Such was the complete! Notable type, too, of that fact, and such the deduction to be grandest order of all human genius drawn from it. Not that it will which seems to arrive at results by satisfy every one. I know that phiintuition :- which a child might pose losophers who deny all that they by a row of figures on a slate-while have not witnessed, and refuse to witness what they resolve to deny, will reject the story in toto; and will prove, by reference to their own traction that incontestably bound the | dogs, that a dog never recognises the name of his master-never yet could be taught arithmetic. I know also had prepared a very erudite and that there are Mystics who will prefer to believe that Mop was in direct spiritual communication with ancient Mystics—such as Iamblious unseen Isaacs, or in a state of clairvoyance, or under the influence of reference to the doctrine of the more the odio fluid. But did we ever yet find in human reason a question nelm Digby and Swedenbourg, to with only one side to it? Is not truth a polygon? Have not sages arisen in our day to deny even the principle of gravity, for which we had been so long contentedly taking the word of the great Sir Isaac? It of a fact which, though it did not is that blessed spirit of controversy render the treatise less curious, which keeps the world going; and it knocked on the head the theory upon is that which, perhaps, explains why Mr. Waife, when his memory was fairly put to it, could remember, out proprietor and earliest preceptor, of the history of the myriads who was Isaac; and his master being have occupied our planet from the called in the homely household by date of Adam to that in which I that Christian name, the sound had now write, so very few men whom entered into Mop's youngest and the world will agree to call wise, and out of that very few so scant a percanine affections had done much centage with names sufficiently known to make them more popularly cation. "Where is Isaac?" "Call significant of pre-eminent sagacity Isaac!" "Fetch Isaao his hat," &c. than if they had been called -

CHAPTER VI.

The Vagrant having got his dog, proceeds to hunt Fortune with it, leaving behind him a trap to catch rats. What the trap does catch is "just like his luck."

new name, improved much upon the broken crockery by some cement acquaintance. He was still in the of his own invention, and for which ductile season of youth, and took to she got him the materials. learning as an amusement to himself. here his ingenuity was remarkable. His last master, a stupid sot, had for when there was only a fragment not gained his affections-and per- to be found of a cup, and a fragment haps even the old soldier, though or two of a saucer, he united them gratefully remembered and mourned, both into some pretty form, which, had not stolen into his innermost if not useful, at all events looked heart, as Waife and Sophy gently well on a shelf. He bound, in smart contrived to do. In short, in a very showy papers, sundry tattered old few days he became perfectly accus- books which had belonged to his tomed and extremely attached to landlady's defunct husband, a Scotch them. When Waife had ascertained gardener, and which she displayed the extent of his accomplishments, on a side-table, under the japan teaand added somewhat to their range tray. More than all, he was of serin matters which cost no great vice to her in her vocation : for Mrs. trouble, he applied himself to the Saunders cked out a small pension task of composing a little drama, -which she derived from the affecwhich might bring them all into tionate providence of her Scotch more interesting play, and in which, husband, in insuring his life in her though Sophy and himself were per- favour-by the rearing and sale of formers, the dog had the premier poultry; and Waife saved her the rôle. And as soon as this was done, expense of a carpenter by the conand the dog's performances thus struction of a new coop, elevated ranged into methodical order and above the reach of the rats, who had sequence, he resolved to set off to a hitherto made sad ravage amongst considerable town at some distance, and to which Mr. Rugge was no her certain secrets in the improvevisitor.

His bill at the cottage made but slight inroad into his pecuniary resources; for in the intervals of leisure from his instructions to Sir Isaac, Waife had performed various makeshifts. little services to the lone widow with country, I kept poultry upon the whom they lodged, which Mrs. principle that the poultry should Saunders (such was her name) insisted upon regarding as money's worth. He had repaired and regu- satility of invention, such readiness lated to a minute an old clock which of resource, such familiarity with had taken no note of time for the divers nooks and crannies in the

STR ISAAC, to designate him by his | last three years; he had mended all the chickens; while he confided to ment of breed and the cheaper processes of fattening, which excited her gratitude no less than her wonder. "The fact is," said Gentleman Waife, "that my life has known Once, in a foreign > keep me." Strange it was to notice such ver-

practical experience of life, in a man now so hard put to it for a livelihood. There are persons, however, who might have a good stock of talent, if they did not turn it all into small change. And you, reader, know as well as I do, that when a sovereign or a shilling is once broken into, the change scatters and dispends itself in a way quite unaccountable. Still coppers are useful in household bills ; and when Waife was really at a pinch, somehow or other, by hook or by crook, he scraped together intellectual halfpence enough to pay his way.

Mrs. Saunders grew quite fond of her lodgers. Waife she regarded as a prodigy of genius; Sophy was the prettiest and best of children; Sir Isaac, she took for granted, was worthy of his owners. But the Comedian did not confide to her his dog's learning, nor the use to which he designed to put it. And in still greater precaution, when he took his leave, he extracted from Mrs. Saunders a solemn promise that she would set no one on his track, in case of impertinent inquiries.

"You see before you," said he, "a man who has enemies-such as rats are to your ohickens; chickens despise rats when raised, as yours are now, above the reach of claws and teeth. Some day or other I may so raise a coop for that little one-I am too old for coops. Meanwhile. if a rat comes sneaking here after us, send it off the wrong way, with a flea in its ear."

Mrs. Saunders promised, between tears and laughter; blessed Waife, kissed Sophy, patted Sir Isaac, and stood long at her threshold watchtheir forms receding in the green parrow lane - dewdrops sparkling on the hedgerows, and the skylark springing upward from the young corn.

Then she slowly turned in-doors. and her home seemed very solitary. We can accustom ourselves to loneliness, but we should beware of infringing the custom. Once admit two or three faces seated at your hearthside, or gazing out from your windows on the laughing sun, and when they are gone, they carry off the glow from your grate and the sunbeam from your panes. Poer Mrs. Sannders! in vain she sought to rouse herself, to put the rooms to rights, to attend to the chickens, to distract her thoughts. The oneeved cripple, the little girl, the shaggy-faced dog, still haunted her : and when at noon she dined all alone off the remnants of the last night's social supper, the very click of the renovated clock seemed to say, "Gone, gone;" and muttering, "Ah! gone," she reclined back on her ohair, and indulged herself in a good womanlike cry. From this luxury she was startled by a knock at the door. "Could they have come back ?" No; the door opened, and a genteel young man, in a black coat and white neckcloth, stepped

"I beg your pardon, ma'am-your name's Saunders—sell poultry?" "At your service, sir. Spring chickens?" Poor people, whatever their grief, must sell their chickens, if they have any to sell. "Thank you, ma'am : not at this moment. The fact is, that I call to make some inquiries. Have not you lodgers here?"

Lodgers! at that word the expanding soul of Mrs. Saunders reclosed hermetically; the last warning of Waife revibrated in her ears: ing the three, as the early sun lit this white-neckclothed gentleman. was he not a rat?

> "No. sir. I han't no lodgers." "But you have had some lately, eh? a crippled elderly man and a little girl."

them; leastways," said Mrs. Saunders, suddenly remembering that she was told less to deny facts than to send inquirers upon wrong directions - "leastways, at this blessed time. Pray, sir, what makes you ask?"

"Why, I was instructed to come down to --- and find out where this person, one William Waife, had gone. Arrived yesterday, ma'am. All I could hear is, that a person answering to his description left the place several days ago, and had been seen by a boy, who was tending sheep, to come down the lane to your house, and you were supposed to have lodgers-(you take lodgers sometimes, I think, ma'am) - because you had been buying some -I must be in time for the three trifling articles of food not in your usual way of custom. Circumstantial evidence, ma'am-vou can have no motive to conceal the truth."

"I should think not indeed, sir," retorted Mrs. Saunders, whom the ominous words "circumstantial evidence" set doubly on her guard. "I did see a gentleman such as you mention, and a pretty young lady. about ten days agone, or so, and they did lodge here a night or two, but they are gone to-"

"Yes, ma'am-gone where?"

"Lunnon."

"Really -- very likely. By the train or on foot?"

"On foot, I s'pose."

" Thank you, ma'am. veying this card to Mr. Waife. My methodical."

"Don't know anything about employer, ma'am, Mr. Gotobed, Craven Street, Strand - eminent solicitor. He has something of importance to communicate to Mr. Waife."

> "Yes, sir-a lawyer; I understand." And as of all rat-like animals in the world Mrs. Saunders had the ignorance to deem a lawyer was the most emphatically devouring, she congratulated herself with her whole heart on the white lies she had told in favour of the intended victims.

> The black-coated gentleman having thus obeyed his instructions. and attained his object, nodded, went his way, and regained the fly which he had left at the turnstile. "Back to the inn," cried he-" quick o'clock train to London."

And thus terminated the result of the great barrister's first instructions to his eminent solicitor to discover a lame man and a little girl. No inquiry, on the whole, could have been more skilfully conducted. Mr. Gotobed sends his head clerk-the head clerk employs the policeman of the village-gets upon the right track-comes to the right houseand is altogether in the wrong-in a manner highly creditable to his researches.

"In London, of course-all people of that kind come back to London." said Mr. Gotobed. "Give me the heads in writing, that I may report If you to my distinguished client, Most should see them again, or hear satisfactory. That young man will where they are, oblige me by con- push his way-business-like and favouring on his behalf, the vagrant was now on his way to the ancient municipal town of Gatesboro', which, heing the nearest place of fitting opulence and population, Mr. Waife had resolved to honour with the début of Sir Isaac as soon as he had appropriated to himself the services of that promising quadruped. He had consulted a map of the county before quitting Mr. Merle's roof, and ascertained that he could reach Gatesboro' by a short cut for foot-travellers along fields and lanes. He was always glad to avoid the high-road: doubtless for such avoidance he had good reasons. But prudential reasons were in this instance supported by vagrant inclinations. High-roads are for the prosperous. By-paths and ill-luck go together. But bypaths have their charm, and ill-luck its pleasant moments.

CHAPTER VII.

The cloud has its silver lining.

road into a long succession of green pastures, through which a straight public path conducted them into one of those charming lanes never seen out of this bowery England-a lane deep sunk amidst high banks, with overhanging oaks, and quivering ash. gnarled Wych-elm, vivid holly, and shaggy brambles, with wild convolvulus and creeping woodbine forcing sweet life through all. Sometimes the banks opened abruptly, leaving patches of greensward, and peeps through still sequestered gates, or over moss-grown pales, into the park our wayfarers found a shadowy nook or paddock of some rural thane, for their rest and repost. Before

THUS turning his back on the good | New villas or old manor-houses on fortune which he had so carefully lawny uplands, knitting, as it were, cautioned Mrs. Saunders against together, England's feudal memories with England's freeborn hopes-the old land with its young people; for England is so old, and the English are so young! And the grey cripple and the bright-haired child often paused, and gazed upon the demesnes and homes of owners whose lots were cast in such pleasant places. But there was no grudging envy in their gaze; perhaps because their life was too remote from those grand belongings. And therefore they could enjoy and possess every banquet of the eve. For at least the beauty of what we see is ours for the moment, on the simple condition that we do not covet the thing which gives to our eyes that beauty. As the measureless sky and the unnumbered stars are equally granted to king and to beggar - and in our wildest ambition we do not sigh for a monopoly of the empyrean, or the They passed, then, from the highfee-simple of the planets - so the earth too, with all its fenced gardens and embattled walls-all its landmarks of stern property and churlish ownership-is ours too by right of eye. Ours to gaze on the fair possessions with such delight as the gaze can give: grudging to the unseen owner his other, and, it may be, more troubled rights, as little as we grudge an astral proprietor his acres of light in Capricorn. Benignant is the law that saith, " Thou shalt not covet."

When the sun was at the highest,

them, ran a shallow limpid trout- the salt. Sophy, that woman destream; on the other side its mar- serves the handsomest token of our gin, low grassy meadows, a farm- gratitude; and we will present her house at the distance, backed by a still grove, from which rose a still we can afford it." church-tower and its still spire. Behind them, a close-shaven sloping lawn terminated the hedgerow of the lane; seen clearly above it, with parterres of flowers on the swarddrooping lilacs and laburnums farther back, and a pervading fragrance from the brief-lived and rich syringas. The cripple had climbed over a wooden rail that separated the lane from the rill, and seated himself under the shade of a fantastic hollow thorn-tree. Sophy, reclined beside him, was gathering some pale scentless violets from a mound which the brambles had guarded from the sun. The dog had descended to the waters to quench his thirst, but still stood knee-deep in the shallow stream, and appeared lost in philosophical contemplation of a swarm of minnows which his immersion had disturbed, but which now made itself again visible on the further side of the glassy brook, undulating round and round a tiny rocklet which interrupted the glide of the waves, and caused thom to break into a low melodious murmur. "For these and all thy mercies, O Lord, make us thankful," said the Victim of Ill-luck, in the tritest words of a pious custom. But never, perhaps, at aldermanio feasts was the grace more sincerely said.

And then he untied the bundle, which the dog, who had hitherto carried it by the way, had now carefully deposited at his side. "As I live," ejaculated Waife, "Mrs. Saunders is a woman in ten thousand. See, Sophy, not contented with the bread and cheese to which I bade chicken-a little cake too for you, tile, not menacing; purely and drily Sophy; she has not even forgotten interrogative. Thus detected, the

with a silver teapot the first moment

His spirits exhilarated by the unexpected good cheer, the Comedian gave way to his naturally blithe humour : and between every mouthful he rattled or rather drolled on, now infant-like, now sage-like. He cast out the rays of his liberal humour, careless where they fellon the child-on the dog-on the fishes that played beneath the wavo -on the cricket that chirped amidst the grass: the woodpecker tapped tho tree, and the cripple's merry voice answered it in bird-like mimicry. To this riot of genial bubble there was a listener, of whom neither grandfather nor grandchild was aware. Concealed by thick brushwood a few paces farther on, a young angler, who might be five or six and twenty, had seated himself, just before the arrival of our vagrant to those banks and waters, for the purpose of changing an unsuccessful fly. At the sound of voices, perhaps susnecting an unlicensed rival-for that part of the stream was preservedhe had suspended his task, and noiselessly put aside the clustering leaves to reconnoitre. The piety of Waife's simple grace seemed to surprise him pleasingly, for a sweet approving smile erossed his lips. He continued to look and to listen. Ho forgot the fly, and a trout sailed him by unheeded. But Sir Isaac, having probably satisfied his speculative mind as to the natural attributes of minnows, now slowly reascended the bank, and after a brief halt and a sniff, walked majestically towards tho hidden observer, looked at him with great solemnity, and uttered her stint her beneficence, a whole an inquisitive bark-a bark not hostention was attracted that way by the remains of the chicken which the bark, saw him, called to Sir lay defenceless on the grass. The Isaac, and said politely, "There is new-comer was evidently of the no harm in my dog, sir. satisfied; and seated himself on his actually in orders.

angler rose; and Waife, whose at- haunches, fixed his attention upon rank of gentleman; his figure was The young man muttered some in- slim and graceful, his face pale, audible reply, and, lifting up his rod, meditative, refined. He would have as in sign of his occupation or ex- impressed you at once with the idea cuse for his vicinity, came out from of what he really was-an Oxford the intervening foliage, and stepped scholar; and you would, perhaps, quietly to Waife's side. Sir Isaac have guessed him designed for the followed him-sniffed again-seemed ministry of the Church, if not pediment in his speech.

CHAPTER VIIL

Mr. Waife excites the admiration, and benignly pities the infirmity of an Oxford scholar.

trust we are not trespassing: this is not private ground, I think?"

war-n-n you off-ff-f." "Is it your father's ground then? Sir, I beg you a thousand pardons."

The apology was made in the Cohad been that impromptu "grace" than the carnal food-which had reply. first commanded his respect and innocent careless talk, part uttered downward is my father's house.

"You are str-str-strangers?" said to dog and child-part soliloquised the Oxonian, after a violent exertion -part thrown out to the ears of the to express himself, caused by an im- lively teeming Nature, had touched a somewhat kindred chord in the WAIFE.-" Yes, sir, travellers. I angler's soul, for he was somewhat of a poet and much of a soliloquist, and could confer with Nature, nor Oxonian .- " And if-f-f-f it feel that impediment in speech which were, my f-f-father would not obstructed his intercourse with men. Having thus far indicated that oral defect in our new acquaintance, the reader will cheerfully excuse me for not enforcing it overmuch. Let it median's grandest style-it imposed be among the things subaudita, as greatly on the young scholar. Waife the sense of it gave to a gifted and might have been a duke in disguise; aspiring nature, thwarted in the but I will do the angler the justice sublime career of Preacher, an exto say that such discovery of rank quisite mournful pain. And I uo would have impressed him little more like to raise a laugh at his more in the vagrant's favour. It infirmity behind his back, than I should before his pale, powerful, - that thanksgiving which the melancholy face-therefore I supscholar felt was for something more press the infirmity, in giving the OXONIAN.-" On the other side wakened his interest. Then that the lane where the garden slopes This ground is his property cer- centrated on a definite pursuit? tainly, but he puts it to its best use, Fortune and Nature are earnest in lending it to those who so piously females, though popular beauties; sume, sir ?"

" My grandchild."

have not far to go?"

"Not very far, thank you, sir. But my little girl looks more delicate than she is. You are not tired. darling?"

"Oh, not at all !" There was no sir ?" mistaking the looks of real love interchanged between the old man and the child; the scholar felt much interested and somewhat puzzled. "Who and what could they be? so unlike foot wayfarers!" On the other hand, too, Waife took a liking to the courteous young man, and conceived a sincere pity for his physical affliction. But he did not for those reasons depart from the discreet caution he had prescribed to himself in seeking new fortunes and shunning old perils, so he turned the subject.

"You are an angler, sir? I suppose the tront in the stream run small?"

"Not very-a little higher up I have caught them at four pounds weight," WAIFE.- "There goes a fine fish vonder-see! balancing himself between those weeds."

OXONIAN .- " Poor fellow, let him he safe to-day. After all, it is a cruel sport, and I should break mywhatever our love for Nature, we always seek some excuse for trusting rod-a sketch-book-a geologist's hammer-an entomologist's neta something."

our ideas would run wild if not con- and refreshed.

acknowledge that Father from whom and they do not look upon coquetall good comes. Your child, I pre- tish triflers in the light of genuine wooers."

The Oxouian, who, in ventiug "She seems delicate; I hope you his previous remark, had thought it likely he should be above his listener's comprehension, looked surprised. What pursuits, too, had this one-eyed philosopher!

"You have a definite pursuit,

" I-alas-when a man moralizes, it is a sign that he has known error: it is because I have been a trifler that I rail against triflers. And talking of that, time flies, and we must be off and away." Sophy re-tied the bundle. Sir Isaac, on whom, meanwhile, she had bestowed the remains of the chicken.

jumped up and described a circle. "I wish you success in your pursuit, whatever it be," stuttered ont

the angler. "Aud I no less heartily, sir, wish you success in yours." " Mine! Success there is beyond my power."

"How, sir? Does it rest so much with others?"

"No. my failure is in myself. My career should be the Church, my pursuit the cure of souls, and-and -this pitiful infirmity! How can I speak the Divine Word-I-I-a stutterer ! 31

The young man did not pause for an answer, but plunged through the self off it. But it is strange that brushwood that bespread the banks of the rill, and his hurried path could be traced by the wave of the ourselves alone to her. A gun-a foliage through which he forced his

We all have our burdens," said Gentleman Waife; as Sir Isaao took WAIFE.-" Is it not because all up the bundle and stalked on, placid

CHAPTER IX.

The Nomad, entering into civilised life, adopts its arts, shaves his poodle, and puts on a black coat. Hints at the process by which a Cast-off exalts himself into a Take-in.

AT twilight they stopped at a quiet | mechanical accuracy, though slight inn within eight miles of Gatesboro'. enthuaiasm. Sonhy, much tired, was glad to creep II.; his eyes looked forth in dark animal must be a French dog?" splendour from locks white as the driven snow. This feat performed. Waife slept the peace of the right- lish name! Precious result of our her on the road, impatient to start, the delay." He did not heed her exclamations, he was absorbed in thought. Thus your signs just as well without." they proceeded slowly on till within Waife turned aside, entered a wood. name, too. Sir Isaac!

"He is to be relied upon, in spite to bed. Waife sate up long after of his French origin," said Waife. her; and, in preparation for the "All national prejudice fades before eventful morrow, washed and shaved the sense of a common interest. You would not have And we shall always find more known the dog again; he was daz- genuine solidity of character in a zling. Not Ulysses, rejuvinated by French poodle than in an English Pallas Athenè, could have been mastiff, whenever a poodle is of use more changed for the better. His to us, and the mastiff is not. But flanks revealed a skin most daintily oh, waste of care! oh, sacrifice of mottled; his tail became leonine, time to empty names! oh, emhlem with an imperial tuft; his mane fell of fashionable education! It never in long curls like the heard of a struck me before—does it not child Ninevite king; his boots were those though thou art, strike thee nowof a courtier in the reign of Charles by the necessities of our drama, this "Well, grandfather?" "And we have given him an Eng-eous, and Sir Isaac, stretched on the own scholastic training: taught at floor heside the bed, licked his mottled preparatory academies precisely that flanksand shivered-"Il faut souffrir which avails us nought when we are pour être beau." Much marvelling, to face the world! What is to be Sophy the next morning beheld the done? Unlearn him his own cogdog; hut before she was up, Waife nomen-teach him another name; had paid the hill and was waiting for too late, too late. We cannot afford

"I don't see why he should be half compassionate, half admiring; called any name at all. He observes

"If I had but discovered that at two miles of the town, and then the beginning. Pity! Such a fine and there, with the aid of Sophy, vanitatum! What desire chiefly put the dog upon a deliberate re- kindles the amhitious? To create hearsal of the anticipated drama. a name—perhaps bequeath a title— The dog was not in good spirits, but exalt into Sir Isaacs a progeny of he went through his part with Mons! And after all, it is possible

(let us hone it in this instance) that | to the microscope than a female's a sensible young dog may learn his sigh to analysis. letters and shoulder his musket just as well though all the appellations dear, back into the lane; I will join by which humanity knows him be condensed into a pitiful monosyllable. Nevertheless (as you will find when you are older), people are air of a pedlar, so I will change it, obliged in practice to renounce for and enter the town of Gatesboro' in themselves the application of those the character of-a man whom you rules which they philosophically prescribe for others. Thus, while I those things alone, de-Isaacised Sir grant that a change of name for that Isaac! Follow your mistress-go!" dog is a question belonging to the policy of Ifs and Buts, commonly on slowly towards the town, with called the policy of Expediency, her hand pensively resting on Sir about which one may differ with Isaac's head. In less than ten others and one's own self every minutes she was joined by Waife, quarter of an hour-a change of attired in respectable black; his hat name for me belongs to the policy and shoes well brushed; a new green of Must and Shall-viz., the policy shade to his eye; and with his finest of Necessity, against which let no air of Père Noble. He was now in dog bark,-though I have known his favourite element. HE WAS dogs howl at it! William Waife is ACTING - call it not imposture. no more; he is dead-he is buried; Was Lord Chatham an impostor and even Juliet Araminta is the when he draped his flannels into baseless fabric of a vision."

guileless eyes.

has used up the name of Waife, and And certainly, considering that who, on entering the town of Gates- Waife, after all, was but a profesboro', becomes a sober, staid, and sional vagabond-considering all the respectable personage, under the turns and shifts to which he has appellation of Chapman. You are been put for bread and salt-the Miss Chapman. Rugge and his wonder is, not that he is full of Exhibition 'leave not a wrack be- stage tricks and small deceptions, hind."

the smile for her grandfather's gay city. When a man for a series of spirits; wherefore the sigh? Was years has only had his wits to live it that some instinct in that fresh, by, I say not that he is necessarily loyal nature, revolted from the a rogue-he may be a good fellow; thought of these aliases, which, if but you can scarcely expect his code requisite for safety, were still akin of honour to be precisely the same to imposture. If so, poor child, she as Sir Philip Sidney's. Homer exhad much yet to set right with her presses, through the lips of Achilles, conscience! All I can say is, that that sublime love of truth, which after she had smiled she sighed, even in those remote times, was the And more reasonably might a reader | becoming characteristic of a gentleask his author to subject a zephyr man and a soldier. But then, you in a few minutes. You are neatly dressed, and if not, would look so. I, in this old coat, have the will soon see before you. Leave Sophy left the wood, and walked the folds of the togs, and arranged the Sophy raised inquiringly her blue curls of his wig so as to add more sublime effect to the majesty of his "You see before you a man who brow and the terrors of its nod? but that he has contrived to retain Sophy smiled, and then sighed- at heart so much childish simpliAchilles is well off during his whole I life, which, though distinguished, is short. On the other hand, Ulysses, who is sorely put to it, kept out of his property in Ithaca, and, in short, living on his wits, is not the less befriended by the immaculate Pallas, because his wisdom sayours somewhat of stage trick and sharp practice. And as to convenient aliases and white fibs, where would have been the use of his wits, if Ulysses had disdained such arts, and been magnanimously munched up by Polyphemus ? Having thus touched on the epic side of Mr. Waife's character with the clemency due to human nature, but with the caution required by the interests of society. permit him to resnme a "duplex conrse," sanctioned by ancient precedent, but not commended to modern imitation.

"Take the dog with you, my

Just as our travellers neared the town, the screech of a railway whistle resounded towards the right -a long train rushed from the jaws of a tunnel, and shot into the neighbouring station.

"How lucky!" exclaimed Waife: "make haste, my dear!" Was he going to take the train? Pshaw! he was at his journey's end. He was going to mix with the throng that would soon stream through those white gates into the town; he was going to purloin the respectable appearance of a passenger by the train. And so well did he act the part of a bewildered stranger just vomited forth into unfamiliar places by one of those panting steam monsters, so artfully amidst the busy competition of nudging elbows, over-bearing shoulders, and the impedimenta of carpet-bags, portmanteaus, babies in arms, and shin-assailing trucks, did he look round, consequentially, on the qui vive, turning his one eye, now on Sophy, now on Sir Isaac, and griping his bundle to his breast did not curtey, but she bowed, as if he suspected all his neighbours: to be Thugs, condottieri, and swellmob, that in an instant fly-men, omnibus-drivers, cads, and porters marked him for their own. "Gatesboro' Arms," "Spread Eagle," "Royal Hotel," "Saracen's Headvery comfortable, centre of High Street, opposite the Town Hall,"were, shouted, bawled, whispered, or whined into his ear. " Is there an honest porter ?" asked the Comedian piteously. An Irishman presented himself. "And is it meself can serve your honour?"-" Take this bundle, and walk on before me to the High Street."-" Could not I take the bundle, grandfather? The man will charge so much," said. the prudent Sophy. "Hush! you indeed!" said the Père Noble. as if addressing an exiled Altesse rowale -" you take a bundle- Miss -Chapman !"

They soon gained the High Street. Waife examined the fronts of the various inns which they passed by. with an eye accustomed to decipher the physiognomy of hostelries, "The Saracen's Head" pleased him, though its imposing size daunted Sophy. He arrested the steps of the porter; "Follow me close," and stepped across the open threshold into the bar. The landlady herself was there, portly and imposing, with an auburn townet, a silk gown, a cameo brooch, and an ample bosom.

"You have a private sittingroom, ma'am?" said the Comedian, lifting his hat. There are so many ways of lifting a hat-for instance, the way for which Louis XIV. was so renowned. But the Comedian's way on the present occasion rather resembled that of the late Duke of B * * *-not quite royal, but as near to royalty as becomes a subject. He added, recovering his head-"And on the first floor?" The landlady on the broad stairs; then, looking chiefly to gentlemen engaged in back graciously, her eyes rested on commercial pursuits, it was new to Sir Isaac, who had stalked forth in her experience,-a gentleman with advance, and with expansive nostrils effects so light, and hands so aristosniffed. She hesitated. "Your dog, cratically helpless. sir! shall Boots take it round to the stables?"

"The stables, ma'am—the stables, my dear," turning to Sophy, with a smile more ducal than the previous of the well-known story how a man bow: "what would they say at home if they heard that noble animal was Granby Hotel, at Harrogate, and consigned to-stables? Ma'am, my been sent away roomless to the other dog is my companion, and as much and less patrician establishment, beaccustomed to drawing-rooms as I am myself." Still the landlady paused. The dog might be accustomed to drawing-rooms, but her drawing-room was not accustomed asking for his grace the Duke of to dogs. She had just laid down a new carpet. And such are the strange and erratic affinities in nature-such are the incongruous concatenations in the cross-stitch of ideas that there are associations between dogs and carpets, which, if wrongful to the owners of dogs, beget no nnreasonable apprehensions in the proprietors of carpets. So there stood the landlady, and there stood the dog! and there they might be standing to this day had not the Comedian dissolved the spell. "Take up my effects again," said he, turning to the porter: "doubtless they are more habituated to distinguish between dog and dog at the Royal Hotel."

The landlady was mollified in a moment. Nor was it only the rivalries that necessarily existed between the Saracen's Head and the Royal Hotel that had due weight with her. A gentleman who could not himself deign to carry childhood which so especially beeven that small bundle, must be longs to the high-bred. "The room indeed a gentleman! Had he come will do, ma'am. I will let you know with a portmanteau-even with a later whether we shall require beds. carpet-bag - the porter's service As to dinner, I am not particular would have been no evidence of -a cutlet-a chicken-what you emerged from the bar, and set foot | rank; but accustomed as she was Herein were equally betokened the two attributes of birth and wealth-viz., the habit of command, and the disdain of shillings. A vague remembrance and his dog had arrived at the cause, while he had a dog, he had not a servant; when, five minutes after such dismissal, came carriages and lackeys, and an imperious valet, A-, who had walked on before with his dog, and who, O everlasting thought of remorse! had been sent away to bring the other establishment into fashion ;-a vague reminiscence of that story, I say, flashed upon the landlady's mind, and she exclaimed, "I only thought, sir, you might prefer the stables; of course. it is as you please-this way, sir. He is a fine animal, indeed, and seems mild."

"You may bring up the bundle, porter." quoth the Père Noble. "Take my arm, my dear; these steps are very steep.

The landlady threw open the door of a handsome sitting-room-her best: she pulled down the blinds to shut out the glare of the sun, then, retreating to the threshold, awaited further orders.

"Rest yourself, my dear," said the Actor, placing Sophy on a couch with that tender respect for sex and please - at seven o'clock. Stay. I beg your pardon for detaining the candidate, and "Spread" been you; but where does the Mayor live?"

out of the town; but his countinghouse is just above the Town Hall -to the right, sir ! "

"Name?"

"Mr. Hartopp!"

"Hartopp! Ah! to be sure! Hartopp, His political opinions. I think, are" (ventures at a guess) " enlightened ? "

LANDLADY. - "Very much so. sir. Mr. Hartopp is highly respected."

WAIFE,-" The chief municipal officer of a town so thriving-fine shops and much plate glass-must march with the times. I think I have heard that Mr. Hartonp promotes the spread of intelligence and the propagation of knowledge."

LANDLADY (rather puzzled) .- "I dare say, sir. The Mayor takes great interest in the Gatesboro'

Athenœum and Literary Institute." have presumed from his character and station. I will detain you no longer, ma'am" (Ducal bow). The landlady descended the stairs. Was her guest a candidate for the representation of the town at the rest quiet, he passed to the door: next election? March with the there he halted, and turning totimes !-spread of intelligence! All candidates she ever knew had that wistful eyes, his own eye moistened. way of expressing themselves -- "Ah!" he murmured, "heaven "March" and "Spread." Not an grant I may succeed now, for if I address had parliamentary aspirant do, then you shall indeed be a little put forth to the freemen and lady!" electors of Gatesboro', but what He was gone.

"March" had been introduced by suggested by the committee. Still she thought that her guest, upon "His private residence is a mile the whole, looked and bowed more like a member of the Upper House. Perhaps one of the amiable though occasionally prosy peers who devote the teeth of wisdom to the cracking of those very hard nuts-"How to educate the masses," "What to do with our criminals," and suchlike problems, upon which already have been broken so many jawbones tough as that with which Samson slew the Philistines.

"Oh, grandfather," sighed Sophy, "what are you about? We shall be ruined-you, too, who are so careful not to get into deht. And what have we left to pay the people here?"

"Sir Isaac! and THIS!" returned the Comedian, touching his forehead. "Do not alarm yourselfstay here and repose-and don't let Sir Isaac out of the room on any account ! "

He took off his hat, brushed the WAIFE .- "Exactly what I should nap carefully with his sleeve, replaced it on his head-not jauntily aside-not like a jeune premier, but with equilateral brims, and in composed fashion, like a père noblethen, making a sign to Sir Isaac to wards Sophy, and meeting her countered the Irish porter, who, dently the daughter of a Gatesboro' having left the bundle in the operative, Mr. Hartopp set him up drawing-room, was waiting pa- in life as a professional messenger tiently to be paid for his trouble.

CHAPTER X.

Showing with what success Gentleman Waife assumes the pleasing part of Friend to the enlightenment of the Age and the Progress of the People.

humoured shrewd face, on every line of which was writ the golden maxim, "Take things asy." "I beg Comedian's heart warmed towards your pardon, my friend; I had him. almost forgotten you. Have you been long in this town?"

"Four years-and long life to your honour !" " Do you know Mr. Hartonp, the Mayor?" "Is it his worship the Mayor? Sure and it is the Mayor as has made a man o' Mike Callaghan." The Comedian evinced urbane curiosity to learn the history of that process, and drew forth a grateful tale. Four summers ago Mike had resigned the "first gem of the sea" in order to assist in making hav for a Saxon taskmaster. Mr. Hartopp who farmed largely, had employed him in that rural occupation. Seized by a malignant fever, Mr. Hartopp had helped him through it, and naturally conceived a liking for the man he helped. Thus, as Mike became convalescent, instead of passing the poor man back to his own country, which at that time gave little employment to the surplus of its agrarian populaa parson, an employment, though few light jobs in his warehouse; excuse for the liberty he ventures

On the landing-place, Waife en- and finally, Mike marrying impruand porter, patronised by the Cor-The Comedian surveyed the good- poration. The narrative made it evident that Mr. Hartopp was a kind and worthy man, and the "An honour to our species, this

Mr. Hartopp !" said Waife, striking his staff upon the floor; "I covet his acquaintance. Would he see you if you called at his countinghouse?"

Mike replied in the affirmative with eager pride, "Mr. Hartopp would see him at once. Sure. did not the Mayor know that time was money? Mr. Hartopp was not a man to keep the poor waiting."

"Go down and stay outside the hall door; you shall take a note for me to the Mayor."

Waife then passed into the bar, and begged the favour of a sheet of note-paper. The landlady seated him at her own desk-and thus wrote the Comedian :-

" Mr. Chapman presents his compliments to the Mayor of Gatesboro', and requests the honour of a very short interview. Chapman's deep interest in the permanent success of those literary institutes which are so distinguished tion beyond an occasional shot at a feature of this enlighted age, and Mr. Mayor's well-known zeal in the animated, not lucrative, he exercised promotion of those invaluable so-Mike's returning strength upon a cieties, must be Mr. Chapman's to take in this request. Mr. C. may add that of late he has earnestly directed his attention to the best means of extraoting new uses from those noble but undeveloped institutions. - Saracen's Head, &c."

This epistle, duly sealed and addressed, Waife delivered to the simultaneously he astounded that functionary with no less a gratuity than half a crown. Cutting short the fervent blessings which this generous donation naturally called forth, the Comedian said, with his happiest combination of suavity and loftiness, "And should the Mayor ask you what sort of person I am-for I have not the honour to be known to him, and there are so many adventurers about, that he one-perhaps you can say that I don't look like a person he need be afraid to admit. You know a gentleman by sight! Bring back an answer as soon as may be: perhaps I shan't stay long in the town. You will find me in the High Street, looking at the shons."

The porter took to his legsimpatient to vent his overflowing heart upon the praises of this munificent stranger. A gentleman, indeed-Mike should think so. If Mike's good word with the Mayor was worth money, Gentleman Waife had put his half-crown out upon famous interest.

The Comedian strolled along the High Street, and stopped before a stationer's shop, at the window of which was displayed a bill, entitled-GATESBORO' ATHENÆUM AND LITERARY INSTITUTE.

LECTURE ON CONCHOLOGY.

BY PROFESSOR LONG. Author of " Researches into the Natural History of Limpets,"

Waife entered the shop, and lifted his hat,-" Permit me, sir, to look at that hand-bill."

"Certainly, sir; but the lecture is over-you can see by the date; it came off last week. We allow the bills of previous proceedings at our Athenseum to be exposed at the window till the new bills are precare of Mike Callaghan - and pared-keeps the whole thing alive.

> "Conchology," said the Comedian. "is a subject which requires deep research, and on which a learned man may say much without fear of contradiction. But how far is Gatesboro' from the British Ocean ?"

"I don't know exactly, sir-a long way."

"Then, as shells are not familiar to the youthful remembrances of your fellow-townsmen, possibly the might reasonably expect me to be lecturer may have found an audience rather select than numerous."

"It was a very attentive audience, sir -and highly respectable-Miss Grieve's young ladies (the genteelest seminary in the town) attended."

WAIFE .- " Highly creditable to the young ladies. But, pardon me, is your Athenseum a Mechanic's institute ?"

SHOPMAN .- "It was so called at first. But, some how or other, the mere operatives fell off, and it was thought advisable to change the word 'Mechanics' into the word 'Literary.' Gatesboro' is not a manufacturing town, and the mechanics here do not realize the expectations of that taste for abstract science on which the originators of these societies founded their-"

WAIFE (insinuatingly interrupting),-"Their calculations of intellectual progress and their tables of pecuniary return. Few of these societies. I am told, are really selfsupporting-I suppose Professor Long is !- and if he resides in Gatesfortune."

SHOPMAN .- "Why, sir, the professor was engaged from Londonfive guineas and his travelling expenses. The funds of the society could ill afford such outlay; but we have a most worthy Mayor, who, assisted by his foreman, Mr. Williams, our treasurer, is, I may say, the life and soul of the institute.".

"A literary man himself, your Mayor?"

The shopman smiled. Not much in that way, sir; but anything to enlighten the working classes. This is Professor Long's great work upon limpets, two vols. post octavo. The Mayor has just presented it to the library of the Institute. I was cutting the leaves when you came in,"

"Very prudent in you, sir. limpets were but able to read printed character in the English tongue. this work would have more interest. for them than the ablest investigations upon the political and social history of man. But," added the Comedian, shaking his head mournfully, "the human species is not testaceous-and what the history of man might be to a limpet, the history of limpets is to a man." So saying, Mr. Waife bought a sheet of cardboard and some gilt foil, relifted his hat, and walked out,

The shopman scratched his head thoughtfully; he glanced from his window at the form of the receding stranger, and mechanically resumed the task of cutting those leaves. which, had the volumes reached the shelves of the Library uncut, would have so remained to the crack of doom.

Mike Callaghan now came in sight, striding fast, "Mr. Mayor sends his love-bother-o'-me-his respex; and will be happy to see your honour."

boro', and writes on limpets, he is | In three minutes more the Comeprobably a man of independent dian was seated in a little parlour. that adjoined Mr. Hartopp's counting-house-Mr. Hartopp seated also, vis-à-vis. The Mayor had one of those countenances upon which good-nature throws a sunshine softer than Clande ever shed upon canvas. Josiah Hartopp had risen in life by little other art than that of quiet kindliness. As a boy at school, he had been ever ready to do a good turn to his schoolfellows: and his schoolfellows at last formed themselves into a kind of police, for the purpose of protecting Jos. Hartopp's pence and person from the fists and fingers of each other. He was evidently so anxious to please his master, not from fear of the rod, but the desire to spare that worthy man the pain of inflicting it, that he had more trouble taken with his education than was bestowed on the brightest intellect that school ever reared; and where other boys were roughly flogged, Jos. Hartopp was soothingly patted on the head, and told not to be cast down, but try again. The same evenhanded justice returned the sugared chalice to his lips in his apprenticeship to an austere leather - seller, who, not bearing the thought to lose sight of so mild a face, raised him into partnership, and ultimately made him his son-in-law and residuary legatee. Then Mr. Hartopp yielded to the advice of friends who desired his exaltation, and from a leather-seller became a tanner. Hides themselves softened their asperity to that gentle dealer, and melted into golden fleeces. He became rich enough to hire a farm for health and recreation. He knew little of husbandry, but he won the heart of a bailiff who might have reared a turnip from a deal table. Gradually the farm became his fee-simple, and the farmhouse expanded into a villa. Wealth and honours flowed in from a better fellows than Mrs. Grundy in the town would have been though he hummed and hawed lamentable, no one was so respectfully listened to. As for the parlia- interest, you say, in literary instimentary representation of the town, tutes, and have studied the subject?" he could have returned himself for one seat and Mike Callaghan for the institutes have occupied my thoughts other, had he been so disposed. But he was too full of the milk of humanity to admit into his yeins a drop from the gall of party. He suffered others to legislate for his native a great thing to bring classes togeland, and (except on one occasion, when he had been persuaded to assist in canvassing, not indeed the objects," electors of Gatesboro', but those of a distant town, in which he possessed some influence, on behalf of a certain eminent orator) Jos. Hartopp was their hearts." only visible in politics whenever Parliament was to be petitioned in favour of some humane measure, or against a tax that would have harassed the poor.

If anything went wrong with him in his business, the whole town combined to set it right for him. Was amuse." a child born to him, Gatesboro' rejoiced as a mother. Did measles or scarlatina afflict his neighbourhood. the first anxiety of Gatesboro' was for Mr. Hartopp's nursery. No one would have said Mrs. Hartopp's nursery; and when in such a department the man's name superin proof of the tenderness he excites? In short, Jos. Hartopp was commonly recognised - viz., that pockets. affection is power, and that, if you still, cordially and disinterestedly, "A gentleman interested in the you will find your neighbours much Gatesboro' Athenæum. My forebrimmed horn. The surliest man gives them credit for,-but always provided that your talents be not ashamed of saying a rude thing to such as to excite their envy, nor Jos. Hartopp. If he spoke in public, your opinions such as to offend their prejudices. Mr. HARTOPP .- "You take an

> THE COMEDIAN .- " Of late, those as presenting the readiest means of collecting liberal ideas into a profitable focus."

MR. HARTOPP .- "Certainly it is ther in friendly union."

THE COMEDIAN .- " For laudable

MR. HARTOPP .- " To cultivate their understandings."

THE COMEDIAN, - "To warm

MR. HARTOPP .- "To give them useful knowledge."

THE COMEDIAN .- " And pleasurable sensations." MR. HARTOPP .- "In a word, to instruct them." THE COMEDIAN. - " And

"Eh!" said the Mayor-"amuse!" Now, every one about the person of this amiable man was on the constant guard to save him from the injurious effects of his own benevolence; and accordingly his foreman, hearing that he was closeted with a stranger, took alarm, and entered on sedes the woman's, can more be said pretence of asking instructions about an order for hides,-in reality, to glower upon the intruder, and keep a notable instance of a truth not bis master's hands out of imprudent

Mr. Hartopp, who, though not do make it thoroughly and unequi- brilliant, did not want for sense, and vocally clear that you love your was a keener observer than was neighbours, though it may not be generally supposed, divined, the quite so well as you love yourself,- kindly intentions of his assistant.

surer of our Institute. chair, Williams."

"You said toamuse, Mr. Chapman, but-" "You did not find Professor Long on conchology amusing?"

"Why," said the Mayor, smiling blandly, "I myself am not a man of science, and therefore his lecture, though profound, was a little dry to me."

" Must it not have been still more dry to your workmen, Mr. Mayor?" "They did not attend," said Wil-"Up-hill task we have to secure the Gatesboro' mechanics. when anything really solid is to be addressed to their understandings."

" Poor things, they are so tired at night," said the Mayor compassionately; "but they wish to improve themselves, and they take books from the library." "Novels," quoth the stern Williams,-"it will be long before they take out that valuable 'History of Limpets." "If a lecture was as amnsing as a novel, would not they attend it?" asked the Comedian. "I suppose they would," returned

Mr. Williams. "But our object is to instruct; and instruction, sir-" "Could be made amusing. If, for instance, the lecturer could produce a live shell-fish, and, by showing what kindness can do towards developing intellect and affection in beings without soul .make man himself more kind to his fellow man?"

Mr. Williams laughed grimly .-"Well, sir !"

"This is what I should propose to do."

"With a shell-fish!" cried the Mayor.

"No, sir; with a creature of nobler attributes-A pog!"

man, sir-Mr. Williams, the trea-| The listeners stared at each other Take a like dumb animals as Waife continued-

" By winning interest for the individuality of a gifted quadruped, I should gradually create interest in the natural history of its species. I should lead the audience on to listen to comparisons with other members of the great family which once associated with Adam. I should lay the foundation for an instructive course of natural history, and from vertebrated mammiferes who knows but we might gradually arrive at the nervous system of the molluscous division, and produce a sensation by the production of a limpet!"

"Theoretical," said Mr. Williams, "Practical, sir; since I take it for granted that the Athenseum, at present, is rather a tax upon the richer subscribers, including Mr. Mayor."

"Nothing to speak of," said the mild Hartopp. Williams looked towards his master with unspeakable love, and groaned. "Nothing indeed-oh!"

"These societies should be wholly self-supporting," said the Comedian, "and inflict no pecuniary loss upon Mr. Mayor."

"Certainly," said Williams, "that is the right principle. Mr. Mayor should be protected."

"And if I show you how to make these societies self-supporting-"

"We should be very much obliged to you." "I propose, then, to give an exhibition at your rooms," Mr. Williams nudged the Mayor, and coughed, the Comedian not appearing to remark cough nor nudge.

"Of course gratuitously. I am not a professional lecturer, gentlemen."

Mr. Williams looked charmed to hear it.

"And when I have made my first effort successful, as I feel sure it will be, I will leave it to you, gentlemen, to continue my undertaking. But I cannot stay long here. If the day after to-morrow—"

"That is our ordinary soirée night," said the Mayor. "But you said a dog sir-dogs not admitted—said a dog, sir—dogs not admitted— Eh, Williams?"

MR. WILLIAMS.—"A mere bye-law, which the sub-committee can suspend if necessary. But would not the introduction of a live animal be less dignified than—"

"A dead failure," put in the Come-

A dead sature, but in the comedian, gravely. The Mayor would have smiled, but he was afraid of doing so, lest it might hurt the feelings of Mr. Williams, who did not seem to take the joke.

"We are a purely intellectual body," said that latter gentleman.

"and a dog-"

"A learned dog, I presume?" observed the Mayor.

Mr. WILLIAMS (nodding).—
"Might form a dangerous precedent for the introduction of other quadrupeds. We might thus descend even to the level of a learned pig.
When are not a menagerie, Mr.—
"Mr.—"

"Chapman," said the Mayor, urbanely.

"Enough," said the Comedina, rising, with his grand air: "if I considered myself at liberty, gentleme, to say who and what I am, you would be sure that I am not trifling with what I consider a very grave and important subject. As to suggesting anything derogatory to the dignity of science, and the eminent repute of the Gatesbord Athenseum, it would be idle to vindicate myself. These grey hairs are—"

He did not conclude that sentence, save by a slight waive of the hand. The two burgesses bowed reverentially, and the Comedian went on—

"But when you speak of precedent, Mr. Williams, allow me to refer you to precedents in point. Aristotle wrote to Alexander the Great for animals to exhibit to the Literary Institute of Athens. At the colleges in Expt lectures were delivered on a dog called Anubis, as inferior, I boldly assert, to that dog which I have referred to, as an Exptian was the control of the control of

Mr. Williams could not say he did. THE COMEDIAN .- "Then I will not quote that passage in Schweig hæuser upon the Molossian dogs in general, and the dog of Alcibindes in particular. But it proves beyond a doubt, that, in every ancient literary institute, learned dogs were highly estimated: and there was even a philosophical Academy called the Cynic-that is, Doggish, or Dogschool, of which Diogenes was the most eminent professor. He, you know, went about with a lanthorn looking for an honest man, and could not find one ! Why? Because the Society of Dogs had raised his standard of human honesty to an impracticable height. But I weary you: otherwise I could lecture on in this way for the hour together, if you think the Gatesboro' operatives prefer erudition to amusement."

"A great scholar," whispered Mr. Williams.—Aloud; "and I've nething to say against your precedents, sir. I think you have made out that part of the case. But, after all, a learned dog is not so very uncommon as to be in itself the striking attraction which you apoper to suppose."

"It is not the mere learning of my dog of which I boast," replied the Comedian. "Dogs may be learned, and men too; but it is the way that learning is imparted, whether by dog or man, for the taking leave of society and its forms; edification of the masses, in order, but you are comparatively young as Pope expresses himself, 'to raise men. I presume on the authority the genius and to mend the heart,' of these grey hairs, and I shall exthat alone adorns the possessor, pect you this evening-say at nine exalts the species, interests the public, and commands the respect of such judges as I see before me." The grand bow.

"Ah!" said Mr. Williams, hesitatingly, "sentiments that do honour to your head and heart: and if we could, in the first instance, just see the dog privately."

"Nothing easier!" said the Coevening?"

Mr. Williams.

kind; but my time is so occupied -only don't spread it about that I that I have long since made it a said so, for we know excellent perrule to decline all private invitations sons of a serious turn of mind out of my own home. At my years, whose opinions that sentiment might Mr. Mayor, one may be excused for shock."

o'clock." The Actor waved his hand graciously and withdrew. "A scholar AND a gentleman."

said Williams, emphatically. And the Mayor, thus authorized to allow vent to his kindly heart, added, "A humorist, and a pleasant one. Perhaps he is right, and our poor operatives would thank us more for a little innocent amusement than median. "Will you do me the for those lectures, which they may honour to meet him at tea this be excused for thinking rather dull, since even you fell asleep when Pro-"Rather will you not come and fessor Long got into the multilocular take tea at my house?" said the shell of the very first class of cepha-Mayor, with a shy glance towards lous mollusca; and it is my belief that harmless laughter has a good THE COMEDIAN .- "You are very moral effect upon the working class

CHAPTER XI.

HISTORICAL PROBLEM: "Is Gentleman Waife a swindler or a man of genius?" Answer-"Certainly a swindler, if he don't succeed," Julius Casar owed two millions when he risked the experiment of being general in Gaul. If Julius Casar had not lived to cross the Rubicon and pay off his debts, what would his creditors have called Julius Cosar?

I NEED not say that Mr. Hartopp | exerted his powers to entertain his and his foreman came duly to tea, visitors, so that even Sir Isaao was but the Comedian exhibited Sir soon forgotten. Hard task, by Isaac's talents very sparingly-just writing, to convey a fair idea of enough to excite admiration with- this singular vagrant's pleasant vein. out sating curiosity. Sophy, whose It was not so much what he said as pretty face and well-bred air were the way of saying it, which gave to not unappreciated, was dismissed his desultory talk the charm of early to bed by a sign from her humour. He had certainly seen an grandfather, and the Comedian then immense deal of life somehow or lage of his loosest prattle, by which, with a glance of the one lustrous eye, and a twist of the mobile lin. he could convey the impression of an original genius playing with this round world of ours-tossing it up. catching it again-easily as a child plays with its particoloured ball, His mere book-knowledge was not much to boast of, though early in life he must have received a fair education. He had a smattering of the ancient classics, sufficient, perhaps, to startle the unlearned. If he had not read them, he had read about them; and at various odds and ends of his life he had picked up acquaintance with the popular standard modern writers. But literature with him was the smallest stripe in the particoloured ball. Still it was astonishing how far and wide the Comedian could spread the sands of lore that the winds had drifted round the door of his playful busy intellect. Where, for instance, could he ever have studied the nature and prospects of Mechanics' Institutes? and yet how well he seemed to understand them. Here, perhaps, his experience in one kind of audience helped him to the key to all miscellaneous assemblages. In fine, the man was an Actor; and if he had thought fit to act the part of Professor Long himself, he would have done it to the life. The two burghers had not spent the time to profit much by observation, without perhaps being himself conscious that he did profit, there was something in the very enfantil-so pleasant an evening for many years. As the clock struck twelve, the Mayor, whose gig had been in waiting a whole hour to take him to his villa, rose reluctantly to depart.

other; and without appearing at | must be out to-morrow. What shall we advertise?"

> "The simpler the better," said Waife; "only pray head the performance with the assurance that it is under the special patronage of his worship the Mayor.'

> The Mayor felt his breast swell as if he had received some overwhelming personal obligation. "Suppose it run thus," continued

the Comedian-

" Illustrations from Domestic Life and Natural History, with LIVE examples: PART 1ST-THE Dog!" "It will take," said the Mayor; "dogs are such popular animals !"

"Yes," said Williams; " and though for that very reason some might think that by the 'live example of a dog' we compromised the dignity of the Institute-still the importance of Natural History-"

"And," added the Comedian. "the sanctifying influences of domestic life-"

" May," concluded Mr. Williams. "carry off whatever may seem to the higher order of minds a too familiar attraction in the-dog!"

"I do not fear the result," said Waife, " provided the audience be sufficiently numerous; for that (which is an indispensable condition to a fair experiment) I issue handhills-only where distributed by the Mayor."

" Don't be too sanguine. I distributed bills on behalf of Professor Long, and the audience was not numerous. However, I will do my best. Is there nothing more in which I can be of use to you, Mr. Chapman ?"

"Yes, later." Williams took alarm, and approached the Mayor's breast-pocket protectingly. Comedian withdrew him aside and whispered, "I intend to give the "And," said Williams, "the bills Mayor a little outline of the exhibithat his fellow-townsmen may sig- affoat in his own head, which amply nify their regard for him by a cheer; justifies his use of the "Saracen's?" it will please his good heart, and If his plan should fail? He will be touching, you'll see-mum!" tell you that is impossible! But if Williams shook the Comedian by it should fail, you say. the hand, relieved, affected, and there runs a story-(I don't vouch confiding.

The visitors departed; and the Comedian lighted his hand-candlestick, whistled to Sir Isaac, and veteran, renowned for professional went to bed without one compunctious thought upon the growth of his bill and the deficit in his pockets. And yet it was true, as Sophy implied, that the Comedian had an honest horror of incurring debt. He generally thought twice before he risked owing even the most trifling bill; and when the bill came in, if it left him penniless, it was paid. And, now, what reckless extravagance! The best apartments! dinner-tea-in the first hotel of the town! half-a-crown to a porter! That lavish mode of life renewed with the dawning sun! not a care for the morrow: and I dare not conjecture how few the shillings in that purse. What aggravation, too, of ply any considerable danger to the guilt! Bills incurred without means British fleet. He meant to prove under a borrowed name! I don't that one hypothesis was impossible pretend to be a lawyer; but it looks by the suggestion of a counter imto me very much like swindling. Yet the wretch sleeps. But are we is impossible but what I shall take sure that we are not shallow moral- Cronstadt!" "But if you don't ists? Do we carry into account the take it?" "It is impossible but right of genius to draw bills upon | what I shall take it; for if I don't the Future? Does not the most take it, there's an end of the British prudent general sometimes burn his fleet; and as it is impossible that ships? Does not the most upright there should be an end of the merchant sometimes take credit on British fleet, it is impossible that the chance of his ventures? May I should not take Cronstadt! not that peaceful slumberer be -Q.E.D.

tion, and bring him into it, in order | morally sure that he has that argosy for its truth: I tell it as it was told to me)-there runs a story, that in the late Russian war a certain naval daring and scientific invention, was examined before some great officials as to the chances of taking Cronstadt. " If you send me," said the admiral, " with so many ships of the line, and so many gunboats, Cronstadt of course will be taken." "But." said a prudent lord, "suppose it should not be taken?" "That is impossible-it must be taken !" "Yes." persisted my lord, "you think so, no doubt; but still, if it should not be taken-what then?" "What then ! -why, there's an end of the British fleet!" The great men took alarm, and that admiral was not sent. But they misconstrued the meaning of his answer. He meant not to impossibility more self-evident. "It

CHAPTER XII.

In which everything depends on Sir Isaac's success in discovering the Law of Attraction.

On the appointed evening, at eight be pardoned then, if, in order to an amateur, not a cut-and-dry professor. The Mayor and Mr. Williams had both spread the report that there was more in him than appeared on the surface: prodigiously learned, but extremely agreeable-fine manners, too !- Who could he be? Was Chapman his real name? &c. &c.

The Comedian had obtained permission to arrange the room beforehand. He had the raised portion of tunate enough to find a green curtain to be drawn across it. From behind this screen he now emerged and bowed. The bow redoubled the first conventional applause. He then began a very short address - extremely well delivered, as you may suppose, but rather in the conversational than the oratorical style.

o'clock, the great room of the Gates- effect this object, he was compelled boro' Athenæum was unusually well to borrow some harmless effects from filled. Not only had the Mayor the stage. In a word, his dog would exerted himself to the utmost for represent to them the plot of a little that object, but the handbill itself drama. And he, though he could promised a rare relief from the pro- not say that he was altogether unacsiness of abstract enlightenment and customed to public speaking (here a elevated knowledge. Moreover, the smile, modest, but august as that of stranger himself had began to excite some famous parliamentary orator speculation and curiosity. He was who makes his first appearance at a vestry), still wholly new to its practice in the special part he had undertaken, would rely on their indulgence to efforts aspiring to no other merit than that of aiding the Hero of the Piece in a familiar illustration of those qualities in which Dogs might give a lesson to humanity. Again he bowed, and retired behind the curtain. A pause of three minntes; the curtain drew up. it for his stage, and he had been for- Could that be the same Mr. Chapman whom the spectators beheld before them? Could three minutes suffice to change the sleek, respectable, prosperous-looking gentleman who had just addressed them, into that image of threadbare poverty and hunger-pinched dejection? Little aid from theatrical costume: the clothes seemed the same, only to He said it was his object to exhibit have grown wondrous aged and the intelligence of that Universal rusty. The face, the figure, the man Friend of Man-the Dog, in some -these had undergone a transmumanner appropriate, not only to its tation beyond the art of the mere sagacious instincts, but to its affec- stage wardrobe, be it ever so amply tionate nature, and to convey there- stored, to effect. But for the patch by the moral that talents, however over the eye, you could not have regreat, learning, however deep, were cognised Mr. Chapman. There was, of no avail, unless rendered service- indeed, about him, still, an air of able to Man. (Applause.) He must dignity; but it was the dignity of civilian, but of some veteran soldier. shaft of a column-dresses by which You could not mistake. Though an antiquary can define a date to a not in uniform, the melancholy man year ! Is delusion there? Is it must have been a warrior! The way thus we are snatched from Thebes the coat was buttoned across the to Athens? No;—place a really chest, the black stock tightened fine actor on a deal board, and for round the throat, the shoulders Thebes and Athens you may hang thrown back in the disciplined habit up a blanket! Why, that very cross of a life, though the head bent for- which the old soldier holds-away ward in the despondency of an from his sight—in that tremulous eventful crisis;—all spoke the de-hand, is but patched up from th cayed, but not ignoble, hero of a foil and cardboard bought at the hundred fields.

about the veteran's air. Mr. Chap- see. Did a soul present think of mak had looked so thoroughly Eng- such minute investigation? Not lish-that tragical and meagre per- one. In the actor's hand that trumsonage looked so unequivocally pery became at once the glorious French. Not a word had the Co- thingby which Napoleon had planted median yet said; and yet all this the sentiment of knightly heroism had the first sight of him conveyed in the men whom Danton would to the audience. There was an have launched upon earth ruthless amazed murmur, then breathless and bestial as galley-slaves that had stillness, the story rapidly unfolded burst their chain. itself, partly by words, much more passionate nature, on our fallen enters gravely-licks his hand apwoe-a dignity, too, not of an affable stage! Scenes so faithful to the stationer's shop. You might see it There was something foreign, too, was nothing more, if you tried to

The badge, wrought from foil and by look and action. There, sate a cardboard, took life and soul; it besoldier who had fought under Napo- got an interest, inspired a pathos, as leon at Marengo and Austerlitz, much as if it had been made-oh! gone through the snows of Muscovy, not of gold and gems, but of flesh escaped the fires of Waterloo-the and blood. And the simple broken Soldier of the Empire! Wondrous words that the veteran addressed to ideal of a wondrous time! and no- it! The scenes, the fields, the hopes, where winning more respect and the glories it conjured up! And now awe than in that land of the old to be wrenched away-sold to supply English foe, in which with slight Man's humblest, meanest wantsknowledge of the Beautiful in Art, sold—the last symbol of such a past! there is so reverent a sympathy for It was indeed "propter vitam vivendi all that is grand in Man! There perdere causas." He would have sate the soldier, penniless and friend- starved rather-but the Child? And less-there, scarcely seen, reclined then the child rose up and came his grandchild, weak and slowly dy- into play. She would not suffer ing for the want of food; and all such a sacrifice-she was not hungry that the soldier possesses wherewith | -she was not weak; and when voice to buy bread for the day, is his cross failed her, she looked up into that of the Legion of Honour. It was iron face and smiled-nothing but a given to him by the hand of the smile. Out came the pocket-hand-Emperor-must be pawn or sell it? kerchiefs! The soldier seizes the Out on the pomp of decoration which cross, and turns away. It shall be we have substituted for the voice of sold! As he opens the door, a dog proaches the table, raises itself on its | intent upon the sous, he thrust his hind-legs, surveys the table dolefully, shakes its head, whines, comes to its master, pulls him by the skirt, looks into his face inquisitively.

What does all this mean? It soon comes out, and very naturally. The dog belonged to an old fellow-soldier. who had gone to the Isle of France to claim his share in the inheritance of a brother who had settled and died there, and who, meanwhile, had confided it to the care of our veteran. who was then in comparatively easy circumstances, since ruined by the failure and fraud of a hanker to whom he had intrusted his all; and his small pension, including the vearly sum to which his cross entitled him, had been forestalled and mortgaged to pay the petty debts which, relying on his dividend from the banker, he had innocently incurred. The dog's owner had been gone for months; his return might be daily expected. Meanwhile the dog was at the hearth, but the wolf puppet-show in the streets? might at the door. Now, this sagacious animal had been taught to perform the duties of messenger and majordomo. At stated intervals he applied to his master for sous, and brought back the supplies which the sous purchased. He now, as usual, came to the table for the accustomed coin he! The dog looked at him depre--the last son was gone-the dog's occupation was at an end. But could not the dog be sold? Impossibleit was the property of another-a sacred deposit; one would be as bad as the fraudulent hanker if one could can be saved also! But pshaw! apply to one's own necessities the property one holds in trust. These little hiographical particulars came out in that sort of hitter and pathetic humour which a study of with her. See those old dominoes! Shakespeare, or the experience of She ranged them on the floor, and actual life, had taught the Comedian | the dog leapt up and came to prove to he a natural relief to an intense his skill. Artfully, then, the Comesorrow. The dog meanwhile aided dian had planned that the dog nose into his master's pockets-heappealed touchingly to the child, and finally put back his head and vented his emotion in a lugubrious and elegiacal howl. Suddenly there is heard without the sound of a showman's tin trumpet! Whether theactor had got some obliging person to perform on that instrument, or whether, as more likely, it was but a trick of ventriloquism, we leave to conjecture. At that note, an idea seemed to seize the dog. He ran first to his master, who was on the threshold about to depart: pulled him back into the centre of the room: next he ran to the child, dragging her towards the same spot, though with great tenderness, and then, uttering a joyons bark, he raised himself on his hind-legs, and, with incomparable solemnity, performed a minuet step! The child catches the idea from the dog. "Was he not more worth seeing than the not people give money to see him. and the old soldier still keep his cross. To-day there is a public fête in the gardens yonder; that showman must be going thither; why not go too?" What! he the old soldier -he stoop to show off a dog! he! catingly, and stretched himself on the floor-lifeless.

Yes, that is the alternative-shall his child die too, and he be too proud to save her? Ah! and if the cross what did the dog know that people would care to see? Oh, much, much. When the child was alone and sad, it would come and play the narrative by his by-play. Still should make some sad mistakes, al-seriously, and became intensely interested in the dog's success: so sorry for his blunders, so triumphant in his lucky hits. And then the child calmed the hasty irritable old man so sweetly, and corrected the dog so gently, and talked to the animal; told it how much they relied on it, and produced her infant alphabet, and spelt out "Save us." The dog looked at the letters meditatively, and henceforth it was evident that he took more pains. Better and better; he will do, he will do! The child shall not starve. the cross shall not be sold. Down drops the curtain.-End of Act I.

Act II. opens with a dialogne spoken off the stage. Invisible dramatis persone, that subsist, with city. airy tongues, upon the mimetic art of the Comedian. You understand that there is a vehement dispute going on. The dog must not be admitted into a part of the gardens where a more refined and exclusive section of the company have hired seats, in order to contemplate, without sharing, the rude dances or jostling promenade of the promiscuous merry-makers. Much hubbub, much humour : some persons for the dog, some against him; privilege and decorum here, equality and fraternity there. A Bonapartist colonel sees the cross on the soldier's breast, and, mille tonnerres, he settles the point. He pays for three reserved seats—one for the soldier. one for the child and a third for the dog. The veteran enters; the child. not strong enough to have pushed through the crowd, raised on his shoulder, Rolla-like; the dog led by a string. He enters erect and warrior-like; his spirit has been roused familiar to their associations, was by contest; his struggles have been thus pointed out to their applause, crowned by victory. But (and here became heartily genial in their ternated by some marvellous sur- | the art of the drama and the actor prises. No, he would not do; yes, culminated towards the highest he would do. The audience took it point)-but he now at once includes in the list of his dramatis persona the whole of his Gatesboro' audience. They are that select company into which he has thus forced his way. As he sees them seated before him. so calm, orderly, and dignified, mauvaise honte steals over the breast more accustomed to front the cannon than the battery of ladies' eyes. He places the child in a chair abashed and humbled; he drops into a seat beside her shrinkingly: and the dog, with more self-possession and sense of his own consequence, brushes with his paw some imaginary dust from a third chair. as in the superciliousness of the well-dressed, and then seats himself, and looks round with serene auda-

The chairs were skilfully placed on one side of the stage, as close as possible to the front row of the audience. The soldier ventures a furtive glance along the lines, and then speaks to his grandchild in whispered, bated breath: "Now they are there, what are they come for? To beg? He can never have the boldness to exhibit an animal for sous - impossible; no. no. let them slink back again and sell the cross." And the child whispers courage; bids him look again along the rows: those faces seem very kind. He again lifts his eyes. glances round, and with an extemporaneous tact that completed the illusion to which the audience were already gently lending themselves, made sundry complimentary comments on the different faces actually before him, selected most felicitously. The audience, taken by surprise, as some fair female, or kindly burgess, median's face, unmoved by such demonstrations-so shy and sadinsinuated its pathos underneath oheer and laugh. You now learned through the child that a dance, on which the company had been supposed to be gazing was concluded, and that they would not be displeased by an interval of some other diversion. Now was the time! The dog, as if to convey a sense of the prevalent ennui, yawned audibly, patted the child on the shoulder, and looked up in her face. game of dominoes," whispered the little girl. The dog gleefully grinned assent. Timidly she stole forth the old dominoes, and ranged them on the ground; on which she slipped from his; they began to play. The experiment was launched; the soldier saw that the curiosity of the company was excited—that the show would commence-the sous follow: and as if he at least would not openly shame his service and his Emperor, he turned aside, slid his hand to his breast, tore away his cross, and hid it. Scarce a murmured word accompanied the action -the acting said all; and a noble thrill ran through the audience. Oh, sublime art of the mime!

The Mayor sate very near where the child and dog were at play. The Comedian had (as he before implied he would do) discreetly prepared that gentleman for direct and personal appeal. The little girl turned her blue eyes innocently towards Mr. Hartopp, and said, "The dog beats me, sir; will you try what you can do?"

cheers and laughter. And the Co- went magistrate and dog. From that time the interest became, as it were, personal to all present. "Will you come, sir?" said the child to a young gentleman, who was straining his neck to see how the dominoes were played; "and observe that it is all fair. You too, sir?" to Mr. Williams. The Concedian stood beside the dog, whose movements he directed with undetected skill, while appearing only to fix his eyes on the ground in conscious abasement. Those on the rows from behind now "A pressed forward; those in advance either came on the stage, or stood up intently contemplating. The Mayor was defeated, the crowd became too thick, and the caresses bestowed on the dog seemed to from her obair; the dog slipped fatigue him. He rose and retreated to a corner haughtily. "Manners, sir," said the soldier; "It is not for the like of us to be proud; excuse him, ladies and gentlemen."-" He only wishes to please all," said the child deprecatingly. "Say how many would you have round us at a time, so that the rest may not be prevented seeing you?" She spread the multiplication figures before the dog: the dog put his paw on 10. "Astonishing!" said the Mayor.

"Will you choose them yourself, sir?"

The dog nodded, walked leisurely round, keeping one eye towards the one eye of his master, and selected ten persons, amongst whom were the Mayor, Mr. Williams, and three pretty young ladies, who had been induced to ascend the stage. The others were chosen no less indici-

ously. The dog was then led artfully on A roar, and universal clapping of from one accomplishment to another, hands, amidst which the worthy much within the ordinary range magistrate stepped on the stage, which bounds the instruction of At the command of its young mis- learned animals. He was asked to tress, the dog made the magistrate a say how many ladies were on the polite bow, and straight to the game stage; he spelt three. What were he was asked who was the first ma- eye of that heart-broken face was on gistrate in the town. The dog made the dog, and the foot of that receding a bow to the Mayor. "What had figure seemed to tremble, recoil, made that gentleman first magistrate?" The dog looked to the alphabet, and spelt "Worth," "Were there any persons present more powerful than the Mayor?" The dog bowed to the three young ladies. "What made them more powerful?" The dog spelt "Beauty." When ended the applause these answers received, the dog went through the musket exercise with the soldier's staff; and as soon as he had performed that, he came to the business part of the exhibition. seized the hat which his master had dropped on the ground, and carried it round to each person on the stage. They looked at one another. "He a hack claptrap; but the sweet voice is a poor soldier's dog," said the glided through the assembly, and child, hiding her face. "No. no; a found its way into every heart, soldier cannot beg," cried the Comedian. The Mayor dropped a coin as his hand hoveringly passed above in the hat; others did the same or affected to do it. The dog took the sir," said the Mayor, with serious hat to his master, who waived him aside. There was a pause. The dog laid the hat softly at the soldier's feet, and looked up to the child beseechingly. "What," asked she, raising her head proudly - "what secures WORTH and defends BEAUTY?" The dog took up the staff and shouldered it. "And to what can the soldier look for aid when he starves and will not beg?" The dog seemed puzzledthe suspense was awful. "Good seized his moment, dropped the heavens," thought the Comedian, "if the brute should break down after all !- and when I took such man-artless man ! care that the words should lie undisturbed-right before his nose!" With a deep sigh the veteran started life that stands out before you. I from his despondent attitude, and crept along the floor as if for escape that are not vainly open to human -so broken down, so crestfallen, sorrows, I plead for what I have their names? "The Graces." Then | face and receding figure; and the start, as it passed by the alphabetical letters which still lay on the ground as last arranged. "Ah! to what should he look for aid?" repeated the grandchild, clasping her little hands. The dog had now caught the cue, and put his paw first upon "WORTH," and then upon "BEAUTY." "Worth!" cried tho ladies-"Beauty!" exclaimed the Mayor. "Wonderful, wonderful!" "Take up the hat," said the child, and turning to the Mayor-"Ah! tell him, sir, that what Worth and Beauty give to Valour in distress is not alms but tribute." The words were little better than

" Is it so?" asked the old soldier, the coins. " Upon my honour it is, emphasis. The audience thought it the best speech he had ever made in his life, and cheered him till the roof rung again, "Oh! bread, bread, for you darling !" cried the veteran. bowing his head over the child, and taking out his cross and kissing it with passion; "and the badge of honour still for me !"

While the audience was in the full depth of its emotion, and generous tears in many an eye, Waife actor, and stepped forth to the front as the man-simple, quiet, earnest

"This is no mimic scene, ladies and gentlemen. It is a tale in real am here to appeal to those hearts Every eye was on that heart-broken represented: True, that the man who needs your aid is not one of the Frenchman, I stretch my hands Europe. But he has fought in these I am a beggar." battles as severe, and been left by He was silent. The dog quietly fortune to as stern a desolation, took up the hat and approached the True, he is not a Frenchman: he is Mayor again. The Mayor extracted one of a land you will not love less the half-crown he had previously than France,-it is your own. He, deposited, and dropped into the hat too, has a child whom he would save two golden sovereigns. Who does from famine. He, too, has nothing not guess the rest? All crowded left to sell or to pawn for bread- forward-youth and age, man and except-oh, not this gilded badge, woman. And most ardent of all see, this is only foil and cardboard— were those whose life stands most except, I say, the thing itself, of close to vicissitude—most exposed to which you respect even so poor a beggary-most sorely tried in the symbol-nothing left to sell or to alternative between bread and pawn but Honour! For these I honour. Not an Operative there have pleaded this night as a show- but spared his mite. man; for these, less haughty than that soldiery which devastated towards you without shame; for

CHAPTER XIII.

Omne ignotum pro Magnifico .- Rumour, knowing nothing of his antecedents, exalts Gentleman Waife into Don Magnifico.

THE Comedian and his two coadju-tors were followed to the Saracen's and when the vent was found, it an unexpected demand upon one's had he given his money? It was emotions, that all had, as it were, the respect due to letters, was deli-

Head Inn by a large crowd, but at became an additional pleasure. But, respectful distance. Though I know strange to say, no one could satisfacfew things less pleasing than to have torily explain to himself these two been decoyed and entrapped into questions-for what, and to whom purse-when one only counted, too, not a general conjecture that the upon an agreeable evening-and exhibitor wanted the money for his hold, therefore, in just abhorrence own uses. No, despite the evidence the circulating plate which some- in favour of that idea, a person so times follows a public oration, respectable, so dignified-addressing homily, or other eloquent appeal to them, too, with that noble assurance British liberality; yet, I will ven- to which a man who begs for himself ture to say, there was not a creature is not morally entitled—a person whom the Comedian had surprised thus characterised must be some into impulsive beneficence, who re- high-hearted philanthropist who gretted his action, grudged its cost, condescended to display his powers or thought he had paid too dear for at an institute purely intellectual, his entertainment. All had gone perhaps on behalf of an eminent but through a series of such pleasurable decayed author, whose name, from cately concealed. Mr. Williams, | tions, to gratify the whole town, as considered the hardest head and he had gratified its selected intelmost practical man in the town, lect? Mr. Williams, in a state of originated and maintained that hy- charitable thaw, now softest of the pothesis. Probably the stranger was soft, like most hard men when once an author himself-a great and softened, suggested this idea to the affluent author. Had not great and Mayor. The Mayor said, evasively, affluent authors-men who are the that he would think of it, and that boast of our time and land-acted. yea, on a common stage, and acted Mr. Chapman before he returned inimitably, too, on behalf of some lettered brother or literary object ? Therefore in these guileless minds, with all the pecuniary advantages But the kind magistrate suggested of extreme penury and forlorn position, the Comedian obtained the respect due to prosperous circumstances and high renown. But there a compliment : that he, the Mayor, was one universal wish expressed by all who had been present, as they took their way homeward-and that though not retired to bed, might wish was to renew the pleasure they have had time for rest and refeshhad experienced, even if they paid ment. This delicate consideration the same price for it. Could not the had its weight; and the streets were long-closed theatre be reopened, and thin when the Mayor's gig stopped, the great man be induced by philan- on its way villa-wards, at the Sarathropic motives, and an assured cen's Head, sum, raised by voluntary subscrip-

he intended to pay his respects to home, that very night-it was proper. Mr. Williams and many others wished to accompany his worship, that Mr. Chapman would be greatly fatigued: that the presence of many might seem more an intrusion than had better go alone, and at a somewhat later hour, when Mr. Chapman,

----CHAPTER XIV.

It is the interval between our first revinings and our final resignation, in which, both with individuals and communities, is to be found all that makes a History worth telling. Ere yet we yearn for what is out of our reach, we are still in the gradle. When wearied out with our yearnings, Desire again falls asleep-we are on the deathbed.

to bed at once, please !"

GENTLEMAN WAIFE. - "Surely you could take something to eat first -something nice, -Miss Chapman?" -(Whispering close) "We can live to-morrow-I shall indeed!" in clover now"-a phrase which SOPHY (leaning on her grand-| means (aloud to the landlady, who father's arm as they ascend the stair crossed the landing-place above) of the Saracen's Head),- But I " grilled chicken and mushrooms am so tired, grandy-I'd rather go for supper, ma'am! Why don't you smile, Sophy! Oh, darling, you are > ill !" " No, no, grandy, dear-only tired -let me go to bed. I shall be better

Waife looked fondly into her face,

but his spirits were too much ex- strange and haunting fascination. hilarated to allow him to notice the unusual flush upon her cheek, except with admiration of the increased beauty which the heightened colour gave to her soft features.

"Well," said he, "you are a pretty child !- a very pretty child-and you act wonderfully. You would make a fortune on the stage; but-" never !- not the stage !"

SOPHY (eagerly) .- " But-no. no.

WAIFE .- " I don't wish you to go on the stage, as you know. A private exhibition-like the one to-night. for instance-has" (thrusting his hand into his pocket) "much to recommend it."

SOPHY (with a sigh) .- " Thank Heaven! that is over now-and you'll not be in want of money for a long, long time! Dear Sir Isaac!" She began caressing Sir Isaac, who received her attentions with solemn pleasure. They were now in Sophy's room; and Waife, after again pressing the child in vain to take some refreshment, bestowed on her his kiss and blessing, and whistled Malbrook s'en va-t-en guerre to Sir Isaac, who, considering that melody an invitation to supper, licked his lips, and stalked forth, rejoicing, but decorous.

Left alone, the child breathed long and hard, pressing her hands to her bosom, and sunk wearily on the foot of the bed. There were no shutters to the window, and the moonlight came in gently, stealing across that part of the wall and floor which the ray of the candle left in shade. The girl raised her eyes slowly towards the window-towards the glimpse of the blue sky, and the slanting lustre of the moon. There is a certain epoch in our childhood, when what is called the romance of sentiment first makes itself vaguely felt. And ever with the dawn of that sentiment, the moon and the stars take a it was smiting her for ingratitude to

Few persons in middle life-even though they be genuine poets-feel the peculiar spell in the severe stillness and mournful splendour of starry skies which impresses most of us, even though no poets at all, in that mystic age when Childhood nearly touches upon Youth, and turns an unquiet heart to those marvellous riddles within us and without, which we cease to conjecture when experience has taught us that they have no solution upon this side the grave. Lured by the light, the child rose softly, approached the window, and, resting her upturned face upon both hands, gazed long into the heavens, communing evidently with herself, for her lips moved and murmured indistinctly. Slowly she retired from the casement, and again seated herself at the foot of the bed. disconsolate. And then her thoughts ran somewhat thus, though she might not have shaped them exactly in the same words: "No! I cannot understandit. Why was I contented and happy before I knew him? Why did I see no harm, no shame in this way of life-not even on that stage with those people-until he said, 'It was what he wished I had never stooped to.' And grandfather says our paths are so different, they cannot cross each other again. There is a path of life, then, which I can never enter-there is a path on which I must always, always walk, always, always, always that path-no escape! Never to come into that other one where there is no disguise. no hiding, no false names-never. never!"-she started impatiently, and with a wild look-" It is killing me!"

Then, terrified by her own impetuosity, she threw herself on the bed, weeping low. Her heart had now gone back to her grandfather;

him. Could there be shame or wrong | became bolder and bolder: it adin what he asked-what he did? vanced up the floors, along the walls; And was she to murmur if she aided now it floods her very pillow, and him to exist? What was the opinion of a stranger boy, compared to the loving kindness, holier and more approving, sheltering love of her sole loving as the lids droop beneath it, guardian and tried fostering friend? And could people choose their own callings and modes of life? If one Waife had once charmed her wonroad went this way, another that; der, stirred through her lulling and they on the one road were borne · farther and farther away from those presence of that encircling moonon the other-as that idea came, light. There! see the eyelids are consolation stopped, and in her closed, no tear upon their fringe, noiseless weeping there was a bitter- See the dimples steal out as the ness as of despair. But the tears sweet lips are parted. She sleeps, ended by relieving the grief that she dreams already! Where and caused them. Wearied out of conjecture and complaint, her mind now? Are there not guardian relapsed into the old native, childish spirits? Deride the question if thou submission. With a fervour in which wilt, stern man, the reasoning and there was self-reproach, she repeated | self reliant-but thou, O fair mother her meek, nightly prayer, that God -who hast marked the strange hapwould bless her dear grandfather, piness on the face of a child that has and suffer her to be his comfort and wept itself to sleep-what sayest thou support. Then mechanically she to the soft tradition, which surely undressed, extinguished the candle, had its origin in the heart of the and crept into bed. The moonlight earliest mother?

seems to her eyes to take a holy A vague remembrance of some tale of "Guardian spirits," with which thoughts, linking itself with the what is the rude world of waking

CHAPTER XV.

There is no man so friendless but what he can find a friend sincere enough to tell him disagreeable truths.

MEANWHILE the Comedian had | prosperity, that it compelled him to bounteous by the novel sense of draught to Sir Isaac, who, exceed-made himself and Sir Isaac extreme- treat himself. He did honour to ly comfortable. No unabstemious the grilled chicken to which he had man by habit was Gentleman Waife. vainly tempted Sophy. He ordered He could dine on a crust, and season half a pint of port to be mulled into it with mirth; and as for exciting negus. He helped himself with a drinks, there was a childlike inno- how, as if himself were a guest, and cence in his humour never known nodded each time he took off his to a brain that has been washed in glass, as much as to say, "Your alcohol. But on this special occa- health, Mr. Waife!" He even sion, Waife's heart was made so offered a glass of the exhibarating ingly offended, retreated under the litself into a Committee of Ways and sofa, whence he peered forth through his deciduous ringlets, with brows knit in grave rehuke. Nor was it without deliherate caution - a whisker first, and then a pawthat he emerged from his retreat, when a plate, heaped with the remains of the feast, was placed upon the hearth-rug.

The supper over, and the attendant gone, the negus still left. Waife lighted his pipe, and, gazing on Sir Isaac, thus addressed that canine philosopher: "Illustrious member of the Quadrupedal Society of Friends to Man, and, as possessing those abilities for practical life which but few friends to man ever display in his service, promoted to high rank-Commissary-General of the Victualling Department, and Chancellor of the Exchequer-I have the honour to inform you that a vote of thanks in your favour has been proposed in this house, and carried unanimously." Sir Isaac, looking shy, gave another lick to the plate, and wagged his tail. "It is true that thou wert once (shall I say it?) in fault at 'Beauty and Worth.'thy memory deserted thee; thy peroration was on the verge of a hreakdown ; but ' Nemo mortalium omnibus horis sapit,' as the Latin grammar philosophically expresseth it. Mortals the wisest, not only on two legs, but even upon four, occasionally stumble. The greatest general, statesman, sage, is not he who commits no blunder, but he who best repairs a blunder, and converts it to success. This was thy merit and distinction! It hath never been mine! I recognise thy superior genius. I place in thee unqualified confidence; and consigning thee to the arms of Morpheus, since I see that panegyrio acts on thy nervous system as a salubrious soporific, I now move that this House do resolve through to his heart's core; and, as Means for the Consideration of the Budget!"

Therewith, while Sir Isaac fell into a profound sleep, the Comedian deliberately emptied his pockets on the table; and arranging gold and silver before him, thrice carefully counted the total, and then divided it into sundry small heaps.

"That's for the bill," quoth he-"Civil List !- a large item. That's . for Sophy, the darling! She shall have a teacher, and learn Music-Education Grant - Current expenses for the next fortnight :-Miscellaneous Estimates: tobaccowe'll call that Secret-Service Money. Ah, scamp-vagrant, is not Heaven kind to thee at last! A few more such nights, and who knows but thine old age may have other roof than the workhouse? And Sophy? -Ab. what of her! Merciful Providence, spare my life till she has outgrown its uses!" A tear came to his eye; he brushed it away quickly, and recounting his money, hummed a joyous tune.

The door opened; Waife looked up in surprise, sweeping his hand over the coins, and restoring them to his pocket.

The Mayor entered.

As Mr. Hartopp walked slowly up the room, his eye fixed Waife's: and that eye was so searching, though so mild, that the Comedian felt himself change colour. His gay spirits fell-falling lower and lower, the nearer the Mayor's step came to him: and when Hartopp, without speaking, took his hand-not in compliment-not in congratulation, but pressed it as if in deep compassion, still looking him full in the face, with those pitying, penetrating eyes, the Actor experienced a sort of shock as if he were read through, despite all his histrionic disguises - read his ohair-abashed-disconcerted.

MR. HARTOPP .- " Poor man ! " THE COMEDIAN (rousing himself with an effort, but still confused).-"Down, Sir Isaac, down! This visit, Mr. Mayor, is an honour which may well take a dog by surprise! Forgive him!"

MR. HARTOPP (patting Sir Isaac, who was inquisitively sniffing his garments, and drawing a chair close to the Actor, who thereon edged his own chair a little away-in vain; for, on that movement, Mr. Hartopp advanced in proportion) .-"Your dog is a very admirable and clever animal; but in the exhibition of a learned dog, there is something which tends to sadden one. what privations has he been forced out of his natural ways? By what fastings and severe usage have his instincts been distorted into tricks? Hunger is a stern teacher, Mr. Chapman; and to those whom it teaches, we cannot always give praise unmixed with pity."

THE COMEDIAN (ill at ease under this allegorical tone, and surprised at a quicker intelligence in Mr. Hartopp than he had given that person credit for) .- "You speak like an oracle, Mr. Mayor ; but that dog, at least, has been mildly educated, and kindly used. Inborn genius, sir, will have its vent. Hum! a most intelligent audience honoured us to-night; and our best thanks are due to you."

MR. HARTOPP .- " Mr. Chapman. let us be frank with each other. I am not a clever man-perhaps a dull one. If I had set up for a clever man, I should not be where I am now. Hush! no compliments. But my life has brought me into frequent contact with those who suffer ; and the dullest of us gain a certain our observation is habitually drawn, have amused your townsfolk; they silent as his visitor, sunk back on | You took me in at first, it is true. I thought you were a philanthropical humourist, who might have crotchets, as many benevolent men. with time on their hands and money in their pockets, are apt to form. But when it came to the hegging hat (I ask your pardon-don't let me offend you)-when it came to the begging hat, I recognised the man who wants philanthropy from others, and whose crotchets are to be regarded in a professional point of view. Sir, I have come here alone, because I alone perhaps see the case as it really is. Will you confide in me? you may do it safely. To be plain, who and what are you?"

THE COMEDIAN (evasively) .--"What do you take me for, Mr. Mayor? What can I be other than an itinerant showman, who has had resort to a harmless stratagem in order to obtain an audience, and create a surprise that might cover the naked audacity of the 'begging hat!""

MR. HARTOPP (gravely). -"When a man of your ability and education is reduced to such stratagems, he must have committed some great faults. Pray Heaven it be no worse than faults!"

THE COMEDIAN (bitterly). -"That is always the way with the prosperous. Is a man unfortunate - they say, 'Why don't he help himself?' Does he try to help himself - they say, 'With so much ability, why does not he help himself better?' Ability and education! Snares and springes, Mr. Mayor! Ability and education! the two worst man-traps that a poor fellow can put his foot into! Aha! Did not you say, if you had set up to be clever, you would not be where you now are? A wise saying; I admire sharpness in the matters to which you for it. Well, Well, I and my dog have amply repaid us. We are I care what becomes of this battered public servants; according as we act hulk? Not a straw. What am I in public-hiss us or applaud. Are to do? What! what! You tell me we to submit to an inquisition into to confide in you-wherefore? How our private character? Are you to can you help me? Who can help ask how many mutton bones has me? Would you give me employthat dog stolen! how many cats has ment? What am I fit for? Nohe worried! or how many shirts thing! You could find work and has the showman in his wallet! how many debts has he left behind him! what is his rent-roll on earth, and his account with heaven !- go and put those questions to ministers, philosophers, generals, poets. When they have acknowledged your right to put them, come to me and the other dog!"

MR. HARTOPP (rising and drawing on his gloves) .- "I beg your pardon! I have done, sir. And yet I conceived an interest in you. It is because I have no talents myself that I admire those who have. I felt a mournful anxiety, too, for your poor little girl-so young, so engaging. And is it necessary that you should bring up that child in a to foot, and his cheek was as pale as course of life certainly equivocal. and to females dangerous?"

The Comedian lifted his eyes suddenly, and stared hard at the face of encouraging. "Cheer up; where his visitor, and in that face there there is a will there is a way; you was so much of benevolent humanity justify the opinion I formed in your - so much sweetness contending favour, despite all circumstances to with authoritative rebuke-that the vagabond's hardihood gave way! he struck his breast, and groaned aloud.

MR. HARTOPP (pressing on the advantage he had gained). - "And have you no alarm for her health? Do you not see how delicate she is? Do you not see that her very talent emotions, which must wear her away?"

WAIFE. - "No, no! stop, stop, detriment; but-" stop! you terrify me, you break my bread for an Irish labourer, nor ask who or what he was; but to a man who strays towards you, seemingly from that sphere in which, if Poverty enters, she drops a curtsy, and is called 'genteel,' you cry, 'Hold, produce your passport: where are your credentials - references?' I have none. I have slipped out of the world I once moved in. I can no more appeal to those I knew in it than if I had transmigrated from one of von stars, and said, 'See there what I was once!' Oh, but you do not think she looks ill !- do you? do you? Wretch that I am! And I thought to save her!"

The old man trembled from head ashes.

Again the good magistrate took his hand, but this time the clasp was the contrary. When I asked you to confide in me, it was not from curiosity, but because I would serve you, if I can. Reflect on what I have said. True, you can know but little of me. Learn what is said of me by my neighbours before you trust me further. For the rest, to-morrow you will have many proposals to comes from her susceptibility to renew your performance. Excuse me if I do not actively encourage it. I will not, at least, interfere to your

"But," exclaimed Waife, not much heart. Man, man! it is all for her heeding this address - "but you that I toil, and show, and beg-if think she looks ill? you think this you call it begging. Do you think is injuring her? you think I am of life, my all !"

Yet still-"

"Yes, yes, yet still-" would you blunt her conscience and with a look of unutterable fear and love of truth? Were you not an anguish, and shaking his head piteimpostor to-night? Would you ask ously, stole back again. Seating pray for an impostor?"

Mayor; "you saw but the sport of crept over the sky - till the sun the thing; you took to it as a school- shone into the windows. The dog, boy. I have known many such men, crouched at his feet, sometimes with high animal spirits like yours. started up and whined as to attract Such men err thoughtlessly; but his notice: he did not heed it. The did they ever sin consciously, they clock struck six, the house began to could not keep those high spirits! stir. The chambermaid came into Good-night, Mr. Chapman, I shall the room; Waife rose and took his hear from you again."

visitor: Waife's head sunk on his was the best here?" he asked with breast, and all the deep lines upon a vacant smile, touching the chambrow and cheek stood forth, records bermaid's arm. of mighty griefs revived-a countenance so altered, now its innocent arch play was gone, that you would your parish apothecaries-the best not have known it. At length he physician -Dr. Gill-did you say rose very quietly, took up the candle, Gill? Thank you; his address, and stole into Sophy's room. Shading High Street. Close by, ma'am." the light with careful hand, he looked With his grand bow-such is habit! on her face as she slept. The smile - Gentleman Waife smiled grawas still upon the parted lip-the clously, and left the room. Sir Isaac murdering my grandchild-my angel | dreams. But the cheek was thinner than it had been weeks ago, and the "Not so: I spoke too bluntly, little hand that rested on the coverlid seemed wasted. Waife took that hand noiselessly into his own! it "Still, if you love her so dearly, was hot and dry. He dropped it her to reverence, and imitate, and himself by the table at which he had been caught counting his gains, he "I never saw it in that light!" folded his arms, and rooted his gaze faltered Waife, struck to the soul; on the floor; and there, motionless, "never, never, so help me Heaven!" and as if in stupefied suspense of "I felt sure you did not," said the thought itself, he sate till the dawn hat, brushing its nap mechanically The door closed on the form of the with his sleeve. "Who did you say

"Sir! the best-what!"

"The best doctor, ma'am-none of child was still in the fairy land of stretched himself and followed.

CHAPTER XVI.

In every civilised society there is found a race of men who retain the instincts of the aboriginal cannibal, and live upon their fellow-men as a natural food. These interesting but formidable bipeds, having canght their victim, invariably select one part of his body on which to fasteu their relentless grinders. The part thus selected is peculiarly susceptible. Providence having made it alive to the least nibble: it is situated just above the hip-joint, it is protected by a tegument of exquisite fibre, vulgarly called "THE BREECRES POCKET." The thoroughbred Anthropophagite usually begins with his own relations and friends; and so long as he confines his voracity to the domestic circle, the Laws interfere little, if at all, with his venerable propensities. But when he has exhausted all that allows itself to be edible in the bosom of private life, the Man-eater falls loose on Society, and takes to prowling-then "Soure qui peut!" the Laws rouse themselves, put on their spectscles, call for their wigs and gowns, and the Anthropophagite turned prowler is not always sure of his dinner. It is when he has arrived at this stage of development that the man-eater becomes of importance, enters into the domain of History, and occupies the thoughts of Moralists," Waife thus went forth from the Place-Podden Place, Upper?" "Saracen's Head" in quest of the doctor, but at a later hour, a man, who, to judge by the elaborate smartness of his attire, and the jaunty assurance of his saunter, must have wandered from the gay purlieus of Regent Street, threaded his way along the silent and desolate thoroughfares that intersect the remotest districts of Bloomsbury. He stopped at the turn into a small street still more sequestered than those which led to it, and looked up to the angle on the wall whereon the name of the street should have been inscribed. But the wall had been lately whitewashed, and the whitewash had obliterated the expected epigraph. The man muttered an impatient execration; and turnof whom to make inquiry, heheld on the opposite side of the way another man apparently engaged in the same over the road towards the other.

On the same morning in which | me if this is a street that is called a

"Sir," returned the sprucer wayfaror, "it is the question I would have asked of you."

"Strange!"

"Very strange indeed that more than one person can, in this busy age, employ himself in discovering a Podden Place! Not a soul to enquire of-not a shop that I seenot an orange-stall!"

"Ha!" cried the other, in a hoarse sepulchral voice-" Ha! there is a pot-boy! Boy-boy-boy! I say: Hold, there! hold! Is this Podden Place-Upper?"

"Yes, it be," answered the potboy, with a sleepy air, caught in that sleepy atmosphere; and chiming his pewter against an area rail with a dull clang, he chanted forth " Pots ing round as if to seek a passenger oho!" with a note as direc-like as that which in the City of the Plagne chanted "Out with the dead ! "

Meanwhile the two wayfarers exresearch. Involuntarily each crossed changed bows and parted - the sprucer wayfarer, whether from the "Pray, sir," quoth the second way- indulgence of a reflective mood, or farer in that desert, "can you tell from an habitual indifference to him, ceased to notice his fellow-soli- was not displeasing to the ear, tary, and rather husied himself in though there might be something sundry little coquetries appertaining to his own person. He passed his hand through his hair, re-arranged the cock of his hat, looked complacently at his boots, which still retained the gloss of the morning's varnish, drew down his wristhands, and, in a word, gave sign of a man who desires to make an effect and feels that he ought to do it. So occupied was he in this self-commune. that when he stopped at length at one of the small doors in the small street, and lifted his hand to the knocker, he started to see that Wayfarer the Second was by his side.

The two men now examined each other briefly but deliberately. Wayfarer the First was still young-certainly handsome, but with an indescribable look about the eye and lip. from which the other recoiled with an instinctive awe-a hard look, a cynical look-a sidelong, quiet, defying, remorseless look. His clothes were so new of gloss that they seemed nut on for the first time. were shaped to the prevailing fashion. and of a taste for colours less subdued than is usual with Englishmen, vet still such as a person of good mien could wear without incurring the charge of vulgarity, though liable to that of self-conceit. If you doubted that the man were a gentleman, you would have been puzzled to guess what else he could be. Were it not for the look we have mentioned, and which was perhaps not habitual, his appearance might have been called prepossessing. In his figure there was the grace, in his step the elasticity, which come from just proportions and muscular strength. In his hand he carried a supple switch-stick, slight and innocuous to appearance, hut weighted at sion well, sir ? " the handle after the fashion of a life-things and persons not concerning | preserver. The tone of his voice artificial in the swell of it-the sort of tone men assume when they desire to seem more frank and offhand than belongs to their nature-a sort of rollicking tone which is to the voice what swagger is to the gait. Still that look !- it produced on you the effect which might be created hy some strange animal, not without heauty, but deadly to man. Wayfarer the Second was hig and burly, middle-aged, large-whiskered, his complexion dirty. He wore a wig, -a wig evident, unmistakahle-a wig curled and rusty-over the wig a dingy white hat. His black stock fitted tight round his throat, and across his breast he had thrown the folds of a Scotch plaid.

WAYFARER THE FIRST .- "You call here, too-on Mrs. Crane?" WAYFARER THE SECOND .- "Mrs. Crane?-you too? Strange!"

WAYFARER THE FIRST (with constrained civility) .- "Sir, I call on business-private business."

WAYFARER THE SECOND (with candid surliness) .- "So do I." WAYFARER THE FIRST .- "Oh!"

WAYFARER THE SECOND .- "Ha! the locks unbar!"

The door opened, and an old meagre woman-servant presented herself.

WAYFARER THE FIRST (gliding hefore the hig man with a serpent's undulating celerity of movement). -"Mrs. Crane lives here?"-"Yes!" "She's at home, I suppose?"-"Yes!" "Take up my card; say I come alone-not with this gentleman."

Wayfarer the Second seems to have been rather put out hy the manner of his rival. He recedes a step.

" You know the lady of this man-"Extremely well."

cedence: I vield it, sir, but conditionally. You will not be long?" "Not a moment longer than I can help; the land will be clear for you in an hour or less,"

"Or less, so please you, let it be or less. Servant, sir."

"Sir. yours - Come, my Hebe; track the dancers, that is, go up the stairs, and let me renew the dreams of youth in the eyes of Bella!"

The old woman, meanwhile, had been turning over the card in her withered palm, looking from the card to the visitor's face, and then to the card again, and mumbling to herself. At length she spoke:

"You, Mr. Losely-you !- Jasper Losely! how you be changed! what ha' ye done to yourself? where's your comeliness? where's the look that stole ladies' hearts ?-you, Jasper Losely! you are his goblin!"

"Hold your peace, old hussey!" said the visitor, evidently annoyed at remarks so disparaging. "I am Jasper Losely, more bronzed of cheek, more iron of hand." He raised his switch with a threatening gesture, that might be in play, for the lips wore smiles, or might be in earnest, for the brows were bent; and pushing into the passage, and shutting the door, said-"Is your mistress up-stairs? show me to her room, or-," The old crone gave him one angry glance, which sunk frightened beneath the cruel gleam of his eyes, and hastening up the stairs with a quicker stride than her age seemed to warrant, cried out-"Mistress, mistress! here is Mr. Losely !- Jasper Losely himself!" By the time the visitor had reached the landing-place of the first floor. a femalo form had emerged from a room above;-a female face peered over the banisters. Losely looked said Mrs. Crane, with a strange up, and started as he saw it. A dreary accent. "I too once tried haggard face-the face of one over if fire could burn up thought, but "Ha! then I yield you the pre- whose life there has passed a blight. When last seen by him it had possessed beauty, though of a masculine rather than wemanly character. Now of that beauty not a trace! the cheeks, sunk and hollow, left the nose sharp, long, beaked as a bird of prey. The hair, once glossy in its ebon hue, now grizzled, harsh, neglected, hung in tortured tangled meshes-a study for an artist who would paint a fury. But the eyes were bright-brighter than ever: bright now with a glare that lighted up the whole face bending over the man. In those burning eyes was there love? was there hate? was there welcome? was there menace? Impossible to distinguish; but at least one might perceive that there was joy. "So," said the voice from above-"so we do meet at last, Jasper Losely; you are come!" Drawing a loose kind of dressingrobe more closely round her, the mistress of the house now descended the stairs-rapidly, flittingly, with a step noiseless as a spectre's, and, grasping Losely firmly by the hand, led him into a chill, dank, sunless drawing-room, gazing into his face fixedly all the while.

He winced and writhed. "There, there, let us sit down, my dear Mrs. Crane."

"And once I was called Bella," "Ages ago! Basta! All things have their end. Do take those eyes of yours off my face; they were always so bright 1-and-really now they are perfect burning-glasses! How close it is! Peuh! I am dead tired. May I ask for a glass of water-a drop of wine in it-orbrandy will do as well?"

"Ho! you have come to brandy and morning drams-ch, Jasper?" bottles are full still !"

spirits.

distrust than in the false goodfrom such pressure, you would judge the woman to be rather by and impulsive than systematically cruel or deliberately false-falso or tyrant, and adopted the tyrant's vices. Above all, in those very lines destructive to beauty that had been ploughed, not by time, over her sallow cheeks, there was written the susceptibility to grief, to shame. to the sense of fall, which was not visible in the unreflective reckless pushing aside the glass which he aspect of the sleek human animal before her.

it did not succeed with me; that is evidences of a cultivated taste. On years ago; - and -there-see the the walls, book-shelves, containing volumes of a decorous and severe While thus speaking, she had un- literature, such as careful parents locked a chiffonier of the shape allow to studious daughters - the usually found in "genteel lodgings," stately masterpieces of Fénélon and and taken out a leathern spirit-case Racine - selections, approved by containing four bottles, with a couple | boarding-schools from Tasso, Dante. of wine-glasses. This case she placed Metastasio :- amongst English auon the table before Mr. Losely, thors, Addison, Johnson, Blair and contemplated him at leisure (his lectures as well as sermons)while he helped himself to the raw elementary works on such sciences as admit female neophytes into As she thus stood, an acute their porticoes, if not into their student of Lavater might have penetralia - botany, chemistry, asrecognised, in her harsh and wasted tronomy. Prim as soldiers on countenance, signs of an original parade stood the books-not a gap nature superior to that of her in their ranks - evidently never visitor; on her knitted brow, a now displaced for recreation-well sense higher in quality than on bound, yet faded, dusty ;-relics of his smooth low forehead; on her a bygone life. Some of them might straight stern lip, less cause for perhaps have been prizes at school, or birthday gifts from prond relahumour which curved his hand- tions. There, too, on the table, some mouth into that smile of the near the spirit-case, lay open a once fickle, which, responding to mirth handsome workbox-no silks now but not to affection, is often lighted on the skeleton reels-discoloured. and never warmed. It is true that but not by use, in its nest of tarin that set pressure of her lip there nished silk slept the golden thimble, might be cruelty, and, still more, There, too, in the corner, near a the secretiveness which can harbour music-stand piled high with musical deceit; and yet, by the nervous compositions of various schools and workings of that lip, when relieved graduated complexity, from "lessons for beginners" to the most arduous gamut of a German oranatural temperament passionate torio, slunk pathetically a poor lute-harp, the strings long since broken. There, too, by the window, cruel only as some predominating hung a wire bird-cage, the bird long passion became the soul's absolute since dead. In a word, round the woman gazing on Jasper Losely, as he complacently drank his brandy. grouped the forlorn tokens of an early state-the lost golden age of happy girlish studies, of harmless girlish tastes.

"Basta-eno"," said Mr. Losely, had twice filled and twice drained-"to business. Let me see the In the room, too, there were some child-I feel up to it now."

Crane's face, as she said-

"The child-she is not here! I have disposed of her long ago." "Eh!-disposed of her! what do you mean?"

"Do you ask as if you feared I safed in accepting it!" had put her out of the world? No! Well, then-you come to England to see the child? You miss-vou love, the child of that-of that-" She paused, checked herself, and added in an altered voice-" of that honest, high-minded gentlewoman, me - you love that child; very natural, Jasper."

scarcely seen since she was born! -do talk common sense. No. But have I not told you that she ought to be money's worth to me-ay, and she shall be yet, despite that proud man's disdainful insolence."

"That proud man - what, you have ventured to address himvisit him-since your return to England?"

"Of course. That's what brought me over. I imagined the man would rejoice at what I told him-open and bank notes. And the brute would not even believe me-all because-"

to be believed before. I told you. when I took the child, that you would never succeed there-that I would never encourage you in the attempt. But you had sold the future as you sold your past-too cheaply, it seems, Jasper."

"Too cheaply, indeed. Who should have been fobbed off with such a pittance?"

Jasper! You should have been a mental characteristic, seemed but

A darker shade fell over Arabella prince, Jasper - such princely tastes! Trinkets and dress, horses and dice, and plenty of ladies to look and die. Such princely spirit too !- bounding all return for loyal sacrifice to the honour you vouch-

Uttering this embittered irony. which nevertheless seemed rather to please than to offend her guest. she kept moving about the room. and (whether from some drawer in the furniture, or from her own person. Losely's careless eye did not whose memory must be so dear to observe) she suddenly drew forth a miniature, and, placing it before him, exclaimed-"Ah, but you are "Love her! a child I have altered from those days-see what you then were!" Losely's gaze, thus abruptly invited, fixed itself on the effigies of a youth eminently handsome, and of that kind of beauty which, without being effeminate, approaches to the fineness and brilliancy of the female countenance-a beauty which renders its possessor inconveniently conspicuous, and too often, by winning that ready admiration which it costs no effort to obtain, withdraws the desire of applause his purse-strings - lavish blessings from successes to be achieved by labour, and hardens egotism by the excuses it lends to self-esteem. It is true that this handsome face "Because you had sold the right had not the elevation bestowed by thoughtful expression; but thoughtful expression is not the attribute a painter seeks to give to the abstract comeliness of early youth-and it is seldom to be acquired without that constitutional wear and tear which is injurious to mere physical beauty. And over could ever have supposed that I the whole countenance was diffused a sunny light, the freshness of buxom health, of luxuriant vigour, "Who, indeed, Jasper! You so that even that arrogant vanity were made to spend fortunes, and which an acute observer mightcall them pittances when spent, have detected as the prevailing a glad exultation in the gifts of her a burthen-at last, I say, the former self, might have daunted with him." the timid and warned the wise. "And I was like this! True! I remember well when it was taken, and no one called it flattering." said Mr. Losely, with pathetic selfcondolence. "But I can't be very much changed," he added, with a half laugh. "At my age one may have a manlier look, yet-" "Yet still be handsome, Jasper." said Mrs. Crane. "You are so. But look at me-what am I?"

"Oh, a very fine woman, my dear Crane-always were. But you neglect yourself; you should not do that; keep it up to the last. Well, but to return to the child. You have disposed of her without my consent, without letting me know."

"Letting you know! How many years is it since you even gave me your address? Never fear, she is in good hands."

"Whose? At all events I must see her."

"See her! What for?"

"What for! Hang it, it is natural that, now I am in England, I should at least wish to know what she is like. And I think it very strange that you should send her away, and then make all these difficulties. What's your object? I don't understand it." "My object? What could be my object but to serve you? At your request I took, fed, reared a child, whom you could not expect me to love, at my own cost. Did I ever ask you for a shilling? Did I ever suffer you to give me one? Never! At last, hearing no more from you, and what little I heard of you making me think that, if anything live?" happened to me (and I was very ill at the time), you could only find that you are comfortably off, and benignant nature. Not there the old man came to me-you had given look which, in the matured man him my address-and he offered to gazing on the bright ghost of his take her, and I consented. She is > "The old man! She is with him! And where is he?"

"I don't know."

"Humph; how does he live? Can he have got any money?"

"I don't know."

"Did anyold friends take him up?" "Would he go to old friends?"

Mr. Losely tossed off two fresh glasses of brandy, one after the other, and, rising, walked to and fro the room, his hands buried in his pockets, and in no comfortable vein of reflection. At length he paused and said, "Well, upon the whole, I don't see what I could do with the girl just at present, though, of course, I ought to know where she is, and with whom. Tell me. Mrs. Crane. what is she like-pretty or plain?"

"I suppose the chit would be called pretty-by some persons at least."

" Very pretty? handsome?" asked Losely, abruptly, "Handsome or not what does it signify? what good comes of beauty? You had beauty enough; what have you done with it?"

At that question, Losely drew himself up with a sudden loftiness of look and gesture, which, though prompted but by offended vanity, improved the expression of the countenance, and restored to it much of its earlier character. Mrs. Crane gazed on him, startled into admiration, and it was in an altered voice, half reproachful, half bitter, that she continued-

"And now that you are satisfied about her, have you no questions to ask about me-what I do-how I

"My dear Mrs. Crane, I know were never of a morcenary temper. I trust you are happy, and so forth -I wish I were: things don't prosper with me. If you could conveniently lend me a five-pound note-"

"You would borrow of me, Jasper? Ah! you come to me in your troubles. You shall have the money-five pounds-ten poundswhat you please, but you will call again for it-you need me nowyou will not utterly desert me now?"

" Best of oreatures !-never !" He seized her hand and kissed it. She withdrew it quickly from his clasp, and, glancing over him from head to foot, said, "But are you really in want ?-you are well dressed, Jasper; that you always were."

"Not always; three days ago very much the reverse; but I have had a trifling aid, and-" "Aid in England? from whom? where? Not from him whom, you say, you had the courage to seek?" "From whom else? Have I no olaim? A miserable alms flung to me. Curse him! I tell you that man's look and language so galled me-so galled," echoed Losely, shifting his hold from the top of his switch to the centre, and bringing I did, to see you on private business the murderous weight of the lead down on the palm of his other hand. come again: may I ask who he is?" "that, if his eye had quitted mine for a moment, I think I must have brained him, and been-" "Hanged!" said Mrs. Crane.

"Of course, hanged," returned tered. "A gentleman, ma'am-says Losely, resuming the reckless voice and manner in which there was that peculiar levity which comes from hardness of heart, as from the steel's hardness comes the blade's play. "But if a man did not sometimes forget consequences, there would be an end of the gallows. I am glad that his eye never left mine." And the leaden head of the switch fell with a dull dumb sound on the floor.

Mrs. Crane made no immediate rejoinder, but fixed on her lawless visitor a gaze in which there was no womanly fear (though Losely's aspect and gesture might have sent a thrill through the nerves of many a hardy man), but which was not without womanly compassion, her countenance gradually softening more and more, as if under the influence of recollections mournful but not hostile. At length she said in a low voice, "Poor Jasper! Is all the vain ambition that made you so false shrunk into a ferocity that finds you so powerless? Would your existence, after all, have been harder, poorer, meaner, if your faith had been kept to me?" Evidently disliking that turn in the conversation, but checking a reply which might have been rude had no visions of five pounds-ten pounds-loomed in the distance, Mr. Losely said, "Pshaw! Bella, pshaw! I was a fool, I daresay, and a sad dog-a very sad dog; but I had always the greatest regard for you. and always shall! Hillo, what's that? A knock at the door! Oh, by the by, a queer-looking man, in a white hat, called at the same timo -gave way to me-said he should

"I cannot guess; no one ever calls here on business except the taxgatherer." The old woman-servant now en-

his name is Rugge." "Rugge-Rugge-let me think." "I am here, Mrs. Crane," said the manager, striding in. "You don't perhaps call me to mind by name :

but-oho-not gone, sir! Do I intrude prematurely?" "No, I have done; good-day, my dear Mrs. Crane."

"Stay, Jasper. I remember you now, Mr. Rugge; take a chair."

She whispered a few words into Losely's ear, then turned to the manager, and said aloud, "I saw you at Mr. Waife's lodging, at the time he had that bad accident."

"And I had the honour to accompany you home, ma'am, and-but shall I speak out before this gentleman?"

"Certainly: you see he is listening to you with attention. This gentleman and I have no secrets from each other. What has become of that person? This gentleman wishes to know."

LOSELY .- "Yes, sir, I wish to know-particularly."

RUGGE .- " So do I ; that is partly what I came about. You are aware, I think, ma'am, that I engaged him and Juliet Araminta, that is, Sophy." Losely. - "Sophy - engaged them, sir-how?"

RUGGE,-" Theatrical line, sir-Rugge's Exhibition; he was a great actor once, that fellow Waife." LOSELY .- "Oh, actor !- well, sir, go on."

RUGGE (who in the course of his address turns from the lady to the gentleman, from the gentleman to the lady, with appropriate gesture and appealing look) .- "But he became a wreck, a block of a man; lost an eve and his voice too. However, to serve him, I took his grandchild and him too. He left me-shamefully, and ran off with his grandchild. sir. Now, ma'am, to be plain with you, that little girl I looked upon as my property-a very valuable property. She is worth a great deal to me, and I have been done out of her. If you can help me to get her back, articled and engaged say for three years, I am willing and happy, ma'am, to pay something handsome unravel the mystery, put me in pos--uncommon handsome.

you."

LOSELY .- " What do you call uncommon handsome, Mr. - Mr.

Tugge?"

RUGGE .- "Rugge! sir: we shan't disagree, I hope, provided you have the power to get Waife to bind the girl to me."

LOSELY .- " I may have the power to transfer the young lady to your care; young lady is a more respectful phrase than girl, and possibly to dispense with Mr. Waife's consent to such arrangement. But excuse me if I say that I must know a little more of yourself, before I could promise to exert such a power on your behalf."

RUGGE.-"Sir, I shall be proud to improve our acquaintance. As to Waife, the old vagabond, he has injured and affronted me, sir. don't bear malice, but I have a spirit-Britons have a spirit, sir. And you will remember, ma'am, that when I accompanied you home, I observed that Mr. Waife was a mysterious man, and had apparently known better days, and that when a man is mysterious, and falls into the sere and yellow leaf, ma'am, without that which should accompany old age, sir, one has a right to suspect that some time or other he has done something or other, ma'am, which makes him fear lest the very stones prate of his whereabout, sir. And you did not deny, ma'am, that the mystery was suspicious, but you said, with uncommon good sense, that it was nothing to me what Mr. Waifo had once been, so long as he was of use to me at that particular season. Since then, sir, he has ceased to be of use-ceased, too, iu the unhandsomest manner. And if you would, ma'am, from a sense of justice, just session of the secret, it might make . Mrs. Crane (loftily) .- "Speak to that base man of use to me againthat gentleman-he may treat with give me a handle over him, sir, so that I might awe him into restoring my property, as, morally speaking, Juliet Araminta most undoubtedly is. That's why I call-leaving my company, to which I am a father. orphans for the present. But I have missed that little girl-that young I called her a phenolady, sir. menon, ma'am-missed her muchit is natural, sir: I appeal to you, No man can be done out of a valuable property and not feel it, if he has a heart in his bosom. And if I had her back safe, I should indulge ambition. I have always had ambition. The theatre at York, sir -that is my ambition; I had it from a child, sir; dreamed of it three times. ma'am, If I had back my property in that phenomenon, I would go at the thing, slap bang, take the York, and bring out the phenomenon, with a claw!"

Losely (musingly).—"You say the young lady is a phenomenon, and for this phenomenon you are willing to pay something handsome —a vague expression. Put it into £.s.d."

RUGGE.—"Sir, if she can be bound to me legally for three years, I would give £100. I did offer to Waife £50—to you, sir, £100."

Losely's eyes flashed, and his hands opened restlessly. "But, confound it, where is she? have you no clue?"

RUGGE.—" No, but we can easily find one; it was not worth my while to hunt them up, before I was quite sure that, if I regained my property in that phenomenon, the law would protect it."

MRS.CRANE (moving to the door).
—"Well, Jasper Losely, you will sell the young lady, I doubt not; and when you have sold her, let me know." She came back and whispered, "You will not perhaps now want money from me, but I shall see you again; for, if you would fathe child, you will need my aid."

"Certainly, my dear friend, I will call again; honour bright."

Mrs. Crane here bowed to the gentlemen, and swept out of the room.

Thus left alone, Losely and Rugge looked at each other with a shy and yet cunning gaze—Rugge's hands in his trousers pockets, his head thrown back—Losely's hands involuntarily expanded, his head be-witchingly bent forward, and a little on one side.

"Sir," said Rugge at length, "what do you say to a chop and a pint of wine? Perhaps we could talk more at our case elsewhere. I am only in town for a day—left my company thirty miles off—orphans, as I said before."

"Mr. Rugge," said Losely, "I have no desire to stay in London, or indeed in England; and the sooner we can settle this matter the better Grant that we find the young lady, you provide for her board and lodging—teach her your honourable profession—behave, of course, kindly to her—"

"Like a father."

"And give to me the sum of £100?"

"That is, if you can legally make her over to me. But, sir, may I inquire by what authority you would act in this matter?"

"On that head it will be easy to satisfy you; meanwhile I accept your proposal of an early dinner.
Let us adjourn—is it to your house?"

"I have no exact private house in London; but I know a public one—commodious."

"Be it so. After you, sir."

As they descended the stairs, the old woman-servant stood at the street door. Rugge went out first—the woman detained Losely.

"Do you find her altered?"
"Whom? Mrs. Cranc?-why.

years will tell. But you seem to watchfully - steadfastly - till his

you."

"Not Bridgett Greggs?" "Is it possible? I left you a middle - aged, rosy - faced woman, a crown for you. I wish I had more to spare!"

Bridget pushed back the silver. "No-I dare not! Take money from you, Jasper Losely! Mistress would not forgive me!"

a snort rather than sigh, of relief.

that set forth his still symmetrical in pain. proportions, the eyes followed him have known me-I don't remember form had vanished, and the dull street was once more a solitude.

Then Arabella Crane turned from the window. Putting her hand to her heart. "How it beats she mut-True, I recognise you now. There's tered; "if in love or in hate, in scorn or in pity, beats once more with a human emotion. He will come again-whether for money or for woman's wit, what care I?-he will come.-I will hold, I will cling to him, no more to part-for hetter Losely, not unreluctantly, restored for worse, as it should have been the crown to his pocket; and, with once at the altar. And the child?" she paused; was it in compunction? stepped into open daylight. As he "The child!" she continued fiercely, crossed the street to join Rugge, and as if lashing herself into rage, who was waiting for him on the "The child of that treacherous, shady side, he mechanically turned hateful mother-yes! I will help to look hack at the house, and, at him to sell her hack as a stage-show the open window of an upper story, -help him in all that does not lift he beheld again those shining eyes her to a state from which she may which had glared down on him from look down with disdain on me. the stairs. Ho tried to smile, and Revenge on her, on that cruel house waved his hand feebly. The eyes -revenge is sweet. Oh! that it seemed to return the smile; and as were revenge alone that hids me he walked down the street, arm-in- oling to him who deserves revenge arm with the ruffian manager, the most." She olosed her burning slowly recovering his springy step, eyes, and sate down droopingly, and in the gloss of the new garments rocking herself to and fro like one

CHAPTER XVIL

In life it is difficult to say who do you the most mischief, enemies with the worst intentions, or friends with the best,

THE conference between Mr. Rugge | a Father's part. Losely, on his side. and Mr. Losely terminated in an undertook to devote the intervening appointment to meet, the next day, hours to consultation with a soliciat the village in which this story tor, to whom Mr. Rugge recom-opened. Meanwhile Mr. Rugge mended him, as to the prompt obwould return to his "orphans," and taining of legal powers to enforce arrange performances in which, for the authority he asserted himself to some days, they might dispense with possess. He would also persuade Mrs. Crane to accompany him to learn of something greatly to his the village, and aid in the requisite advantage. A reward of £5 will be investigations-entertaining a tacit given to any one who will furnish but instinctive belief in the supe- information where the said William riority of her acuteness. "Set a Waife, and the little girl who acfemale to catch a female," quoth Mr. Rugge.

fixed, the three hunters opened strongly built, has lost one eye, and their chase. They threw off at the Cobbler's stall. They soon caught called Sophy, is twelve years old, the same scent which had been followed by the lawyer's clerk. They and light brown hair. They had arrived at Mrs. Saunders' - there with them a white French poodle the two men would have been at dog. fault like their predecessor. But friends of the missing party." The the female was more astute. To next day passed-no information; drop the metaphor, Mrs. Saunders but on the day following, a young could not stand the sharp crossexamination of one of her own sex. "That woman deceives us," said at the Red Lion Inn, and asked to Mrs. Crane, on leaving the house. see X. X. The two men were out "They have not gone to London. on their researches - Mrs. Crane man with a few stage juggling tricks quiries. can get on in country villages, but would be lost in cities. Perhaps, as dismount, and walk in. Mrs. Crane it seems he has got a dog-we have received him in the inn parlour, found out that from Mrs. Saunders -he will make use of it for an itinerant puppet-show."

"Punch!" said Mr. Rugge-

" not a doubt of it."

"In that case," observed Mrs. Crane, "they are probably not far to see in my ri-ri-ri-ride yesterday off. Let us print handbills, offering -on a wa-wa-wall :- You-you, I a reward for their clue, and luring -sup-sup-" the old man himself by an assurance that the inquiry is made in order growing impatient, "one of the that he may learn of something to his advantage."

day they were posted up on the walls, not only of that village, but companies him, may be found. The said William Waife is about On the day and in the place thus sixty years of age, of middle stature, is lame of one leg. The little girl, but looks younger; has blue eyes This bill is printed by the gentleman of good mien, dressed in black, rode into the town, stopped What could they do there? Any stayed at home to answer in-The gentleman was requested to > which swarmed with flies. She stood in the centre-vigilant, grim spider of the place. "I ca-ca-call," said the gentleman, stammering fearfully, "in con-conse> quence of a b-b-bill-I-ch-chanced

"Am X. X." put in Mrs. Crane, friends of Mr. Waife, by whom the handbill has been circulated; it In the course of the evening the will indeed be a great relief to us to handbills were printed. The next know where they are-the little girl more especially."

Mrs. Crane was respectably on those of the small towns and dressed-in silk, iron-grey; she had hamlets for some miles round. The crisped her flaky tresses into stiff handbills ran invitingly thus: "If hard ringlets, that fell like long William Waife, who left --- on screws from under a black velvet the 20th ult., will apply at the Red band. Mrs. Crane never wore a cap Lion Inn at -, for X. X., he will -nor could you fancy her in a cap; but the valvet band looked as rigid as if gummed to a hoop of steel. Her manner and tone of voice were those of an educated person, not unused to some society above the vulser of the visitor, in whom the reader recognises the piscatorial contains, with whom Waife had in contains, with whom Waife had in of the reading hooket, drew back as the sawood and spoke; and, bent on an errand of kindness, be was seized with a vague misgiving.

Mss. Chang (blandly).—" I fear they must be badly off. I hope they are not wanting the necessaries of life. But pray be seated, sir." She looked at him again, and with more respect in her address than she had before thrown into it, added, with a half curtsy, as she seated herself by his side, "A clergyman of the Established Church. I presume, sir?"

OXONIAN (stammer, ás on a former occasion, respectfully omit-ted).—"With this defect, ma'an: industrial to the point. Some days ago I happened to fall in with an elderly person, such as is described, with a very pretty female child, and a French dog. The man—gentleman, perhaps I may call him, judging from his conversation—interested me much; so did the little girl. And if I could be the means of directing real friends anxious to serve them.—"

Mrs. Crane.—"You would indeed be a benefactor. And where are they now, sir?"

Oxonan.—"That I cannol positively stell you. But before I say more, will you kindly satisfy my curiosity? He is perhaps an eccentrio person—this Mr. Waife?—a little—"Theo Xonain stopped, and touched his forelead. Mrs. Crane made no prompt reply—sho was musing. Unwarily the scholar continued: "Because, in that case, I should not like to interferce."

MES. CRANE.—"Quite right, sir. His own friends would not interfere with his roving ways, his little whims on any account. Poor man, why should they? He has no property for them to covet. But it is a long story. I had the care of that dear little girl from her infancy; sweet child!"

OxONLAN.—"So she seems."

MES. CRANE.—"And now she has a most comfortable home provided for her; and a young girl, with good friends, ought not be tramping about the country, whatever an old man may do. You must allow that, sir?"

OXONIAN.—" Well—yes, I allow that; it occurred to me. But what is the man?—the gentleman?" MES. CRANE.—" Very 'eccentric.'

as you say, and inconsiderate, perhaps, as to the little girl. We will not call it insane, sir. But—are you married?"

OXONIAN (blushing). - "No, ma'am."

MES. CRANE.—"But you have a sister, perhaps?"

Oxonian.—"Yes; I have one sister."

MRS. CEANE.—"Would you like your sister to be running about the country in that way—carried off from her home, kindred, and friends?"

Oxonian.—"Ah! I understand.
The poor little girl is fond of the old man—a relation, grandfather perhaps? and he has taken her from her home; and though not actually insane, he is still—"

MES. CRANE.—"An unsafe guide for a female child, delicately reared. I reared her; of good prospects, too. O sir, let us save the child! Look.—"S bed drew from a sidepocket in her stiff iron-srey apron a folded paper; she placed it in the Oxonian's hand; he glanced over and returned it.

after this. It is a good many miles could refer me to one of them. I off where I met the persons whom I have no doubt that you seek; and two or three days ago my father received a letter from a very worthy. excellent man, with whom he is often brought into communication upon benevolent objects - a Mr. Hartopp, the Mayor of Gatesboro', in which, among other matters, the Mayor mentioned briefly that the Literary Institute of that town had been much delighted by the performance of a very remarkable man with one eye, about whom there seemed some mystery, with a little girl and a learned dog; and I can't help thinking that the man, the girl, and the dog, must be those whom I saw, and you seek."

MRS. CRANE.—"At Gatesboro'?

is that far ? "

OXONIAN .- " Some way; but you can get a cross train from this village. I hope that the old man will not be separated from the little girl; they seemed very fond of each other."

MES. CRANE .- " No doubt of it: very fond; it would be cruel to separate them. A comfortable home for both. I don't know, sir, if I dare offer to a gentleman of your evident. rank the reward,-but for the poor of your parish.

Oxonian. - "Oh, ma'am, our poor want for nothing; my father is rich. But if you would oblige me by a lineafter you have found these interesting persons-I am going to a distant part of the country tomorrow-to Montfort Court, in ---shire."

MRS. CRANE .- "To Lord Montfort-the head of the noble family of Vipont?"

OXONIAN .- "Yes; do you know Jane!"

"I see, ma'am. I cannot hesitate any of the family, ma'am? If you should feel more satisfied as to-"

> MRS. CRANE (hastily) .-- " Indeed. sir, every one must know that great family by name and repute. know no more. So you are going to Lord Montfort's! The Marohioness, they say, is very beautiful?"

> Oxonian .- " And good as beautiful. I have the honour to be connected both with her and Lord Montfort: they are cousins, and my grandfather was a Vipont. I should have told you my name-Morley; George Vipont Morley."

Mrs. Crane made a profound curtsy, and, with an unmistakable smile of satisfaction, said, as if half in soliloguy-" So it is to one of that noble family-to a Vipont-that the dear child will owe her restoration to my embrace! Bless you, sir!"

"I hope I have done right," said George Vipont Morley, as he mounted his horse. "I must have done right, surely!" he said again. when he was on the high-road. "I fear I have not done right," he said a third time, as the face of Mrs. Crane began to haunt him; and when at sunset he reached his home, tired out, horse and man, with an unusually long ride, and the green water-bank on which he had overheard poor Waife's simple grace and joyous babble came in sight-"After all," he said, dolefully, "it was no business of mine. I meant well; but-" His little sister ran to the gate to greet him-" Yes! I did quite right. How should I like my sister to be roving the country, and acting at Literary Institutes with a poodle dog? Quite right; kiss me.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Let a king and a beggar converse freely together, and it is the beggar's fault if he does not say something which makes the king lift his hat to him.

THE scene shifts back to Gatesboro', was not injurious to the morality of the forenoon of the day succeeding Gatesboro'. Besides these notables, the memorable Exhibition at the there were loungers and gossips. Institute of that learned town, Mr. Hartopp was in the little parlour behind his country-house, his hours of business much broken into by suggesting the expediency of a those intruders who deem no time deputation, ostensibly for the purunseasonable for the indulgence of pose of asking him to repeat his curiosity, the interchange of thought, performance, but charged with prior the interests of general humanity vate instructions to cross-examine and of national enlightenment. The him as to his pedigree. The gentle excitement produced on the pre- Mayor kept his eyes fixed on a vious evening by Mr. Chapman, mighty ledger-book, pen in hand, Sophy, and Sir Isaac, was greatly on The attitude was a rebuke on inthe increase. Persons who had truders, and in ordinary times would seen them naturally called on the have been so considered. But mild-Mayor to talk over the Exhibition. ness, however majestic, is not always Persons who had not seen them, effective in periods of civic commostill more naturally dropped in just tion. The room was animated by to learn what was really Mr. Mayor's hubbub. You caught broken senprivate opinion. The little parlour tences here and there orossing each was thronged by a regular levee, other, like the sounds that had been There was the proprietor of a dis- frozen in the air, and set free by a mal building, still called "The thaw, according to the veracious Theatre," which was seldom let narrative of Baron Munchausen except at election time, when it was hired by the popular candidate for the delivery of those harangues upon liberty and conscience, tyranny and oppression, which furnish present grave and well-disposed, is the staple of declamation equally to decoyed into becoming-" the dramatist and the orator. There was also the landlord of the Royal poodle, sir, that plays at dominoes Hotel, who had lately built to his like a-" house "The City Concert-room,"-a superb apartment, but a losing speculation. There, too, were three descending to act for the benefit of highly respectable persons, of a some distressed brother who is-" serious turn of mind, who came to suggest doubts whether an enter- ROOM .- " One hundred and twenty with no particular object except that of ascertaining who Mr. Chapman was by birth and parentage, and PLAYHOUSE PROPRIETOR,-"The theatre is the-" SERIOUS GENTLEMAN .- " Plausible snare by which a population, at

EXCITED ADMIRER.-"A French

CREDULOUS CONJECTURER. --"Benevolent philanthropist, con-

PROPRIETOR OF CITY CONCERTtainment of so frivolous a nature feet long by forty, Mr. Mayor ! Talk of that damp theatre, sir, you might | took him by the hand, and led him as well talk of the-"

Suddenly the door flew open, and pushing aside a clerk who designed to announce him, in burst Mr. Chapman himself.

He had evidently expected to find the Mayor alone, for at the sight of that throng he checked himself. and stood mute at the threshold. The levee for a moment was little girl in a bad way! Oh, no; no less surprised, and no less doctors always exaggerate in order mute. But the good folks soon to get more credit for the cure. Not recovered themselves. To many it that I would disparage Dr. Gillwas a pleasure to accost and con- fellow-townsman - first-rate man. gratulate the man who the night Still 'tis the way with doctors to talk before had occasioned to them emo- cheerfully if one is in danger, and tions so agreeable. Cordial smiles to look solemn if there is nothing broke out-friendly hands were to fear." thrust forth. Brief but hearty compliments, mingled with entreaties to renew the performance to a of her age, too ?-Eh! eh!" larger audience, were showered round. The Comedian stood hat in hand, mechanically passing his sleeve over its nap, muttering half inaudibly. "You see before you a man"and turning his single eye from one low fever." face to the other, as if struggling to guess what was meant, or where he was. The Mayor rose and came forward-"My dear friends," said that's what he says-nervous exhe, mildly, " Mr. Chapman calls by appointment. Perhaps he may have something to say to me confidentially."

The three serious gentlomen, who had hitherto remained aloof, eveing Mr. Chapman, much as three inquisitors might have eyed a Jew, shook three solemn heads, and set the example of retreat. The last to linger were the rival proprietors of the theatreand the city concert-room. Each whispered the stranger-one the left ear, one the right. Each thrust into his hand a printed paper. As the door closed on them the Comedian let fall the papers; his arm drooped to his side; his whole cricket-ball." frame seemed to collapse. Hartopp gently to his own arm-chair beside the table. The Comedian dropped on the chair, still without speaking.

MR. HARTOPP .- " What is the matter? What has happened?" WAIFE .- " She is very ill :- in a bad way; the doctor says so-Dr. Gill "

MR. HARTOPP (feelingly),-"Your

WAIFE.-" Do you think so-you have children of your own, sir?-

MB. HARTOPP .- "Yes; I know all about children-better. I think, than Mrs. H. does. What is the complaint?"

WAIFE .- " The doctor says it is MR. HARTOPP .- " Caused by nervous exoitement, perhaps." WAIFE (looking up) .- "Yescitement."

MR. HARTOPP .- "Clever sensitive children, subjected precociously to emulation and emotion, are always liable to such maladies. My third girl, Anna Maria, fell into a low fever, caused by nervous excitement in trying for school prizes."

WAIFE .- " Did she die of it, sir ?" MR. HARTOPP (shuddering). -"Die - no! I removed her from school-set her to take care of the poultry-forbade all French exercises, made her take English exercise instead-and ride on a donkey. She's quite another thing now-checks as red as an apple, and as firm as a

WAIFE .- " I will keep poultry; I will buy a donkey. Oh, sir! you talks to you about me, sir? I am don't think she will go to heaven speaking of my innocent child. yet, and leave me here?"

her rest and oniet. But no excitement-no exhibitions."

WAIFE (emptying his pockets on the table) .- " Will you kindly count that money, sir? Don't you think that would be enough to find her some pretty lodging hereabouts till she gets quite strong again? With green fields-she's fond of green fields, and a farm-yard with poultry -though we were lodging a few days ago with a good woman who kept hens, and Sophy did not seem to take to them much. A canary bird is more of a companion, and-"

HARTOPP (interrupting) .- "Ayay-and you! what would you do?" WAIFE .- " Why, I and the dog would go away for a little while about the country." HARTOPP .- " Exhibiting ?"

WAIFE .- " That money will not last for ever, and what can we do-I and the dog-in order to get more for her?"

HARTOPP (pressing his hand warmly) .- "You are a good man, sir. I am sure of it; you cannot have done things which you should be afraid to tell me. Make me your confidant, and I may then find some employment fit for you, and you need not separate yourself from your little girl."

WAIFE .- " Separate from her! I should only leave her for a few days at a time till she gets well. This money would keep her-how long? Two months? three? how long? -the doctor would not charge much."

HABTOPP,-" You will not confide in me then? At your agehave you no friends-no one to speak a good word for you?"

a haughty air),-"So-so! Who Stocks than in its chief magistrate's

Does she want a good word spoken MR. HARTOPP .- " Not if you give for her? Heaven has written it in her face."

Hartopp persisted no more; the excellent man was sincerely grieved at his visitor's obstinate avoidance of the true question at issue; for the Mayor could have found employment for a man of Waife's evident education and talent. But such employment would entail responsibilities and trust. How recommend to it a man of whose life and circumstances nothing could be known -a man without a character?-And Waife interested him deeply. We have all felt that there are some persons towards whom we are attracted by a peculiar sympathy not to be explained-a something in the manner, the cut of the face, the tone of the voice. If there are fifty applicants for a benefit in our gift, one of the fifty wins his way to our preference at first sight, though with no better right to it than his fellows. We can no more say why we like the man than we can say why we fall in love with a woman in whom no one else would discover a charm. "There is," says a Latin love-poet, "no why or wherefore in liking." Hartopp, therefore, had taken, from the first moment, to Waife-the staid, respectable, thriving man, all muffled up from head to foot in the whitest lawn of reputation-to the wandering, shifty, tricksome scatterling, who had not seemingly secured, through the course of a life bordering upon age, a single certificate for good conduct. On his hearthstone, beside his ledger-book, stood the Mayor, looking with a respectful admiration that puzzled himself upon the forlorn creature, who could give no reason why he should not be WAIFE (jerking up his head with rather in the Gatesboro' Parish easy-chair. Yet, were the Mayor's they who have learned that Nature sympathetic liking and respectful has her nobles, reverently bow the admiration wholly unaccountable? head! A man, true to man's grave Runs there not between one warm religion, can no more despise a life human heart and another the elec-tric chain of a secret understanding? ing affection stands out sublime In that maimed outcost, so stub-through the rents and chinks of forbornly hard to himself—so tremu-lously sensitive for his sick child— mockery a temple in ruins—if still was there not the majesty to which left there the altar.

CHAPTER XIX.

Very well so far as it goes,

Mr. Habtopp.-"I cannot presume | in book - learning, Mr. Chapman. to question you further, Mr. Chap- But as to children's complaints in a man. But to one of your knowledge practical way," added Hartopp, with of the world, I need not say that a glow of pride, "Mrs. H. says she'd your silence deprives me of the rather trust the little ones to me power to assist yourself. We'll talk than to Dr. Gill. I'll see your child. no more of that."

Mr. Mayor" little girl, make your mind easy-at Gatesboro' for a time? More may least for the present. I will place be made in this town than elseher at my farm cottage. My bailiff's where." wife, a kind woman, will take care of her, while you pursue your calling heart to act here again without her. elsewhere. As for this money, you I feel at present as if I can never will want it yourself; your poor again act at all! Something else little child shall cost you nothing, will turn up. Providence is so kind So that's settled. Let me come up to me, Mr. Mayor." and see her. I am a bit of a doctor myself. Every man blest with a will come soon?" he said, anxiously. large family, in whose house there The Mayor, who had been locking is always some interesting case of up his ledgers and papers, replied, small-pox, measles, hooping-cough, "I will but stay to give some orders; scarlatina, &o., has a good private in a quarter of an hour I shall be at practice of his own. I'm not brilliant your hotel."

and set her up. I'll be bound. But WAIFE,-"Thank you gratefully, now I think of it," continued Hartopp, softening more and more, "if Mg. Hartopp.-"But for the exhibit you must, why not stay at

"No. no: I could not have the

"Waife turned to the door-" You

CHAPTER XX.

Sonhy hides heart and shows temper.

THE child was lying on a sofa drawn | she hid it behind her pillow. The near the window in her own room, Mayor smiled-" My dear child, do and on her lap was the doll Lionel you think I should hurt your had given to her. Carried with her | doll ?" in her wanderings, she had never Sophy coloured and said, murplayed with it; never altered a ribbon muringly, "No, sir, not hurt it, in its yellow tresses; but at least but-" she stopped short. once a-day she had taken it forth and looked at it in secret. And all grandpaps about you, my dear, and that morning, left much to herself, we both wish to give you a little it had been her companion. She holiday. Dolls are well enough for was smoothing down its frock, which the winter, but green fields and daisy she fancied had got ruffled-smooth- chains for the summer." ing it down with a sort of fearful tenderness, the doll all the while her grandfather, and back again to staring her full in the face with its the Mayor, shook her curls from blue bead eyes. Waife, seated near her eyes, and looked seriously inquiher, was trying to talk gaily; to in- sitive. vent fairy tales blithe with sport and had placed the dominoes before Sir slender wrist. Then he began to at them, from the languid heavy woodbine round the norch, the seemed spiritless; he was aware that the great China gander who had a something was wrong. Now and pompous strut, which made him then he got up restlessly, sniffed the the drollest creature possible. And dominoes, and placed a paw gently, Sophy should go there in a day or being encouraged, he lay down again bees, but not so busy, uneasily, often shifting his position | Sophylistened very earnestly, very as if the floor was grown too hard gravely, and then sliding her hand for him. Thus the Mayor found the from the Mayor, caught hold of her three. He approached Sophy with grandfather's arm firmly, and said, the step of a man accustomed to "And you, Grandy-will you like sick-rooms and ailing children-step it?-won't it be dull for you, Grandy, light as if shod with felt-put his dear?" handon her shoulder, kissed her forehead, and then took the doll. Sophy "I and Sir Isaac will go and take a started, and took it back from him stroll about the country for a few quickly, but without a word; then weeks, and-"

"I have been talking to your

Sophy glanced from the Mayor to

The Mayor, observing her quietly, fancy; but his invention flagged, stole her hand into his own, feeling and the fairies prosed awfully. He the pulse as if merely caressing the Isaac, but Sophy had scarcely looked describe his bailiff's cottage, with eyes on which the doll so stupidly farmyard, the bee-hives, the pretty fixed its own. Sir Isaac himself duck-pond with an osier island, and very gently, on Sophy's knee. Not two, and be as happy as one of the

"Why, my darling," said Waife, so: I thought he meant that, I Rugge," tried not to believe it; go away- "Rugge-who is he?" said the you? and who's to take care of you? Mayor, curiously, catching at any who'll understand you? I want clue, care! I-I! No, no, it is youyou who want care. I shall be well said. Waife, fondling her on his to-morrow-quite well, don't fear, breast, "Hush! What is to be He shall not be sent away from me; done, sir?" he shall not, sir. Oh, grandfather, grandfather, how could you?" She to say no more before Sophy. and flung herself on his breast, clinging then replied, addressing himself to there - clinging as if infancy and age were but parts of the same whole.

"But," said the Mayor, "it is not as if you were going to school, my dear; you are going for a holiday. And your grandfather must leave you-must travel about-'tis his calling. If you fell ill and were with him, think how much you would be in his way. Do you know." he added, smiling, "I shall begin to fear that you are selfish."

"Selfish!" exclaimed Waife, an-

"Selfish!" echoed Sophy, with a melancholy scorn that came from a sentiment so deep that mortal eye could scarce fathom it. "Oh, no, sir! can you say it is for his good, not for, what he supposes, mine, that you want us to part? The pretty cottage, and all for me-and what HISTORIC MUSE," I would break for him?-tramp tramp along the hot dusty roads. Do you see that rest my eyes on the green lawn he is lame? Oh, sir, I know him -vou don't. Selfish! he would dical digression upon that beautifier have no merry ways that make of the moral life which is called you laugh without me; would you, "Good Temper." Ha-the Historic Grandy, dear? Go away, you are Muse is dozing. By her leave !a naughty man-go, or I shall hate Softly.

SOPHY (passionately) .- "Ithought | you as much as that dreadful Mr.

"Hush, my darling !- hush !"

Hartopp made a sly sign to him, her-

"What is to be done? Nothing shall be done, my dear child, that you dislike. I don't wish to part you two. Don't hate me-lie down again-that's a dear. There, I have smoothed your pillow for you; oh. here's your pretty doll again."

Sophy snatched at the doll petulantly, and made what the French call a mone at the good man as she suffered her grandfather to replace her on the sofa.

"She has a strong temper of her own," muttered the Mayor: "so has Anna Maria a strong temper!"

Now, if I were anyway master of my own pen, and could write as I pleased, without being hurried along helter-skelter, by the tyrannical exactions of that "voung Rapid" in buskins and chiton, called "THE off this chapter, open my window, without, and indulge in a rhapso-instinctively the eye rests upon the which calls itself "sensitive feeling," green! how the calm colour lures and frets at imaginary offences; is and soothes it. But is there to the the tendency to be grateful for kindgreen only a single hue? See how ness-yet take kindness meekly, and infinite the variety of its tints! accept as a benefit what the vain What sombre gravity in you cedar, call a due? From dispositions thus you motionless pine-tree! What blessed, sweet temper will come lively but unvarying laugh in you forth to gladden thee, spontaneous glossy laurels! Do those tints charm and free. Quick with some, with us like the play in the young leaves some slow, word and look emerge of the lilac-lighter here, darker out of the heart. Be thy first questhere, as the breeze (and so slight tion, "Is the heart itself generous the breeze!) stirs them into ohecker and tender?" If it be so, self--into ripple? Oh sweet green, to control comes with deepening affecthe world what sweet temper is to tion. Call not that a good heart man's life! Who would reduce which hastening to sting if a fibre into one dye all thy lovely varieties? be ruffled, cries, "I am no hypowho exclude the dark steadfast ver- crite." Accept that excuse, and dure that lives on through the winter revenge becomes virtue. But where day; or the mutinous caprice of the the heart, if it give the offence, gentler, younger tint that came fresh pines till it win back the pardon; through the tears of April, and will if offended itself, bounds forth to shadow with sportive tremor the forgive, ever longing to soothe, ever blooms of luxuriant June?

CHAPTER XXI

Being an Essay on Temper in general, and a hazardons experiment on the reader's in particular.

proverb, "where absent-Prudence" self, thou art safe!

THERE, the window is open! how is it free from the morbid self-love grieved if it wound; then be sure Happy the man on whose mar- that its pobleness will need but few riage-hearth temper smiles kind trials of pain in each outbreak, to from the eyes of woman! "No refine and chastise its expression. deity present," saith the heathen Fear not then; be but noble thy-

-no joy long a guest where Peace Yet what in childhood is often is not a dweller. Peace, so like called, rebukingly, "temper," is but Faith, that they may be taken for the cordial and puissant vitality each other, and poets have clad them which contains all the elements that with the same veil. But in child- make temper the sweetest at last. hood, in early youth, expect not the Who amongst us, how wise soever, changeless green of the cedar, can construe a child's heart? who Wouldst thou distinguish fine tem- conjecture all the springs that seper from spiritless dulness, from cretly vibrate within, to a touch on cold simulation-ask less what the the surface of feeling? Each child, temper, than what the disposition. but especially the girl-child, would Is the nature sweet and trustful, task the whole lore of a sage, deep subtle emotions which we grown folks have outlived.

"She has a strong temper," said the Mayor, when Sophy snatched the doll from his hand a second time, and pouted at him, spoiled child, looking so divinely cross, so petulantly pretty. And how on earth could the Mayor know what associations with that stupid doll made her think it profaned by the ment ever are! touch of a stranger? Was it to her as Shakespeare, to distinguish those | eyes as to his-mere waxwork and frippery, or a symbol of holy remembrances, of gleams into a fairer world, of "devotion to something afar from the sphere of her sorrow?" Was not the evidence of "strong temper" the very sign of affectionate depth of heart? Poor little Sophy. Hide it again—safe out of sight close, inscrutable, unguessed, as childhood's first treasures of senti-

CHAPTER XXII

The object of Civilization being always to settle people one way or the other, the Mayor of Gatesboro' entertains a statesmanlike ambition to settle Gentleman Waife: no doubt a wise conception, and in accordance with the genius of the Nation .- Every Session of Parliament, England is employed in settling folks, whether at home or at the Antipodes, who ignorantly object to be settled in her way; in short, "I'll settle them," has become a vulgar idiom, tantamount to a threat of uttermost extermination or smash .- Therefore the Mayor of Gatesboro'. harbouring that benignant idea with reference to "Gentleman Waife." all kindly readers will exclaim, "Dii Meliora! What will he do with it?"

THE doll once more safe behind for her; her pulse has much nerthe pillow. Sophy's face gradually yous excitability; she wants a compardon?"

"I forgive you with all my heart," cried the Mayor, interpreting the asked no questions. I will own tolook aright. "And now try and you a weakness of mine-I value compose yourself and sleep while I myself on being seldom or never talk with your grandpapa below."

"I don't see how it is possible that I can leave her," said Waife, when the two men had adjourned to the sitting-room.

seriously, "that it is the best thing to the cottage."

softened; she bent forward, touched plete rest; she ought not to move the Mayor's hand timidly, and about with you on any account. But looked at him with pleading, peni- come-though I must not know, it tent eyes, still wet with tears-eyes seems, who and what you are, Mr. that said, though the lips were silent Chapman-I don't think you will -"I'll not hate you. I was un- run off with my cows, and if you grateful and peevish; may I beg like to stay at the bailiff's cottage for a week or two with your grandchild, you shall be left in peace, and taken in. I don't think I could forgive the man who did take me in. But taken in I certainly shall be, if, despite all your mystery, you are not as honest a fellow as ever "I am sure," quoth the Mayor, stood upon shoe-leather! So come Waife was very much affected by actor, forcing a laugh-" I'm not a this confiding kindness; but he shook man likely to starve. Oh. never his head despondently, and that same fear, sir." abject, almost cringing humility of mien and manner which had pained. at times, Lionel and Vance, crept over the whole man, so that he seemed to cower and shrink as a Pariah before a Brahmin. "No sir; thank you most humbly. No, sir-that must not be. I must work for my daily hread, if what a poor vagabond like me may do can be called work. I have made it a rule hearth and home of any kind man, who, not knowing my past, has a right to suspect me. Where I lodge, I pay as a lodger; or whatever favour shown me spares my purse. I try to return in some useful humble way. Why, sir, how could I make free and easy with another man's board and roof-tree for days or weeks together. when I would not even come to your Mayor remembered and was startled. her in a week, and once every week How Williams will revere me !" till she's well again."

"And what will you do?"

"I don't know-hut," said the a prouder step.

So the Mayor went away, and strolled across the fields to his bailiff's

"It is all very well that the poor cottage, to prepare for the guest it would receive.

man should be away for some days," thought Mr. Hartopp. "Before he comes again, I shall have hit on some plan to serve him; and I can learn more about him from the child in his absence, and see what he is for years not to force myself to the really fit for. There's a schoolmaster wanted in Morley's village. Old Morley wrote to me to recommend him one. Good salary-pretty house. But it would be wrong to set over young children-recommend to a respectable proprietor and his parson-a man whom I know nothing about. Impossible! that will not do. If there was any place of light service which did not require trust or hearthstone for a cup of tea?" The responsibility-but there is no such place in Great Britain. Suppose I Waife hurried on. "But for my were to set him up in some easy poor child I have no such scruples way of husiness-a little shop, eh? -no shame, no false pride. I take I don't know. What would Williams what you offer her gratefully-grate- say? If, indeed, I were taken in! fully. Ah, sir, she is not in her right -if the man I am thus credulously place with me; but there's no use trusting turned out a rogue"-the kicking against the pricks. Where Mayor paused and actually shivered was I? Oh! well, I tell you what at that thought-"why then, I should we will do, sir. I will take her to be fallen indeed. My wife would not the cottage in a day or two-as soon let me have half-a-crown in my as she is well enough to go-and pockets; and I could not walk a spend the day with her, and deceive hundred yards hut Williams would her, sir! yes, deceive, cheat her, sir! be at my heels to protect me from I am a cheat-a player-and she'll being stolen hy gypsies. Taken in think I'm going to stay with her; hy him !- No, impossible! But if and at night, when she's asleep, I'll it turn out as I suspect-that, concreep off, I and the other dog. But trary to vulgar prudence, I am di-I'll leave a letter for her-it will vining a really great and good man soothe her, and she'll be patient and in difficulties-Aha, what a triumph wait. I will come back again to see I shall then gain over them all! The good man laughed aloud at that thought, and walked on with

CHAPTER XXIII.

A pretty trifle in its way, no doubt, is the love between youth and youth-Gay varieties of the bauble spread the counter of the Great Toy-Shop-But thou, courteous Dame Nature, raise thine arm to you shelf, somewhat out of everyday reach, and bring me down that obsolete, neglected, unconsidered thing, the Love between Age and Childhood,

THE next day Sophy was better- lively curiosity to see and judge for the day after, improvement was herself of the objects of her liege more visible-and on the third day lord's benevolent interest. the porch-from the breath of the lazy kine, as they stood knee-deep in the pool, that, belted with weeds and broad-leaved water-lilies, lay calm and gleaming amidst level pastures.

Involuntarily they arrested their steps, to gaze on the cheerful landscape and inhale the balmy air. Meanwhile the Mayor came out from the cottage porch, his wife leaning on his arm, and two of his younger children bounding on before, with joyous faces, giving chase started from the woodbine.

Waife paid his bill, and conducted shared, of course, the anxiety which her to the rural abode to which, formed the standing excitement of credulous at last of his promises to all those who lived but for one godshare it with her for a time, he en- like purpose, that of preserving ticed her fated steps. It was little Josiah Hartopp from being taken more than a mile beyond the suburbs in. But whenever the Mayor speciof the town, and though the walk ally wished to secure his wife's tired her, she concealed fatigue, and countenance to any pet project of would not suffer him to carry her. his own, and convince her either The cottage now smiled out before that he was not taken in, or that to them-thatched gable roof, with be discreetly taken in is in this fancy barge-board-half Swiss, half world a very popular and sure what is called Elizabethan-all the mode of getting up, he never failed fences and sheds round it, as only to attain his end. That man was your rich traders, condescending to the cunningest creature! As full turn farmers, construct and main- of wiles and stratagems in order to tain-sheds and fences, trimand neat, get his own way-in benevolent obas if models in waxwork. The breezy jects - as men who set up to be air came fresh from the new hay- clever are for selfish ones. Mrs. stacks-from the woodbine round Hartonp was certainly a good woman, but a made good woman. Married to another man, I suspect that she would have been a shrew. Petruchio would never have tamed her. I'll swear. But she, poor lady, had been gradually, but completely, subdued, subjugated, absolutely cowed beneath the weight of her spouse's despotic mildness; for in Hartopp there was a weight of soft quietude, of placid oppression, wholly irresistible. It would have buried a Titaness under a Pelion of moral featherbeds. Mass upon mass of downy to a gaudy butterfly which they had influence descended upon you, seemingly yielding as it fell, enveloping, Mrs. Hartopp had conceived a overbearing, stifling you-not presenting a single hard point of con- Anne !- Mary Anne, dear." One tact-giving in as you pushed against of the two children owning that it-suppling itself seductively round name approached - snub-nosed, you, softer and softer, heavier and black-eyed, with cheeks like peoheavier, till, I assure you, ma'am, nies. "This little girl, my Mary no matter how high your natural Anne, was as pale as you-overwifely spirit, you would have had study; and now, my dear child, you it smothered out of you, your last must try and steal a little of her rebellious murmur dying languidly colour. Don't you think my Mary away under the descending fleeces. "So kind in you to come with man?"

me, Mary," said Hartopp, "I could not have been happy without your whispering Waife-"image of her approval-look at the child-something about her like Mary Anne. and Mary Anne is the picture of vou!"

two children, having lost trace of that acute, sensible expression is the butterfly, had run up towards yours - quite yours. Sir Isaac, Sophy. But her shy look made make a bow to the young lady, themselves shy-shyness is so con- and then, sir, go through the sword tagious - and they stood a little exercise!" aloof, gazing at her. Sir Isaac at him, and wagged his tail.

Sophy, and acknowledging that the to repay benevolence by mirth. face was singularly pretty, glanced Finally, much pleased, Mrs. Hartopp graciously towards her husband, took her husband's arm to depart, and said, "I see the likeness!" The children, on being separated then to Sophy, "I fear you are from Sir Isaac, began to cry. The tired, my dear; you must not over- Mayor interrupted his wife-who. fatigue yourself-and you must take if left to herself, would have milk fresh from the cow every scolded them into worse cryingmorning." And now the bailiff's told Mary Anne that he relied on wife came briskly out, a tidy, fresh- her strong intellect to console her coloured, kind-faced woman, fond of brother Tom; observed to Tom ohildren-the more so because she that it was not like his manly nature had none of her own.

So they entered the farmyardto Sophy the cows and the turkeys, stile. the hen-coops, and the great China

Anne is like her papa, Mr. Chap-

"Like me!" exclaimed the Mayor: mother ! - the same intellectual look!"

Said the artful Actor, "Indeed, ma'am, the young lady has her Waife advanced, uncovering; the father's mouth and eyebrows, but

The dog, put upon his tricks, stalked direct to the Mayor, sniffed delighted the children; and the poor actor, though his heart lay in Mrs. Hartopp now bent over his breast like lead, did his best to set an example of weeping to his sister; and contrived thus to flatter Mrs. Hartopp being the chief their tears away in a trice, and sent talker; and she, having pointed out them forward in a race to the turn-

Waife and Sophy were alone in gander, led her by the one hand- the cottage parlour,-Mrs. Gooch, while Sophy's other hand clung the bailiff's wife, walking part of firmly to Waife's-across the little the way back with the good couple, garden, with its patent bee-hives, in order to show the Mayor a heifer into the house, took off her bonuet, who had lost appetite and taken to and kissed her. "Very like Mary moping. "Let us steal out into the back-garden, my darling," said Waife. "I see an arbour there, where I will compose myself with a should miss it if it did not come; vine, a liberty I should not like to but it does not seem to me as if I take in-doors." They stepped across were applauded. If I felt that, I the threshold, and gained the arbour, which stood at the extreme It is as if that somebody else into end of the small kitchen-garden, and commanded a pleasant view of friends with the audience: and all pastures and cornfields, backed by the blue outline of distant hills. Afar were faintly heard the laugh of the Mayor's happy children, now and then a tinkling sheep-bell, or the tap of the wood-pecker, unrepressed by the hush of the midmost think how I have been feeling for summer, which stills the more tuneful choristers amidst their coverts, is it that I am growing selfish? as Waife lighted his pipe, and smoked Mr. Mayor said. Oh no. Now we silently; Sophy, resting her head on his bosom, silent also. She was exquisitely sensitive to nature: the quiet beauty of all round her was for you-all for you!" soothing a spirit lately troubled, and health came stealing gently back through fame and through heart. At length she said softly - "We could be so happy here, grandfather! It cannot last, can it?"

"Tis no use in this life, my dear." returned Waife, philosophising: "no use at all disturbing present happiis man's, to-morrow his Maker's, But tell me frankly, do you really ing? I don't mean as we did in Mr. Rugge's show. I know you way, as the other night. You sigh ! Out with it."

"I like what you like, Grandy."

people like what they do well." am not myself. I am some one else!" are as wise as a little woman, and

"And the applause?" "I don't feel it? I daresay I should stop short, and get frightened. whom I was changed was making my feeling is for that somebodyjust as, Grandy dear, when it is over, and we two are alone together, all my feeling is for you-at least (hanging her head) it used to be; but lately, somehow, I am ashamed to myself more than for you. Is itare here-not in those noisy towns -not in the inns and on the highways ;- now here, here, I do feel again

"You are my little angel, you are." said Waife, tremulously. "Selfish! you! a good joke that! Now you see, I am not what is called Demonstrative-a long word, Sophy, which means, that I don't show to you always how fond I am of you; and, indeed," he added ingenuously. "I am not always aware of it myself. ness by asking 'can it last?' To-day I like acting-I like the applause, and the lights, and the excitement, and the illusion-the make-belief of dislike so much the idea of exhibit- the whole thing; it takes me out of memory and thought-it is a world that has neither past, present, nor hate that; but in a genteel private future, an interlude in time-an escape from space. I suppose it is the same with poets when they are making verses. Yes, I like all this: "That's not true. I like to smoke; and when I think of it, I forget you you don't. Come, you do dislike too much. And I never observed, acting? Why? you do it so well- Heaven forgive me! that you were wonderfully. Generally speaking, pale and drooping, till it was pointed out to me. Well, take away your "It is not the acting itself, Grandy arms. Let us consult! As soon as dear, that I don't like. When I am you get quite, quite well-how shall in some part, I am carried away-I we live? what shall we do? You keeper; and I'm such a harumscarum old fellow, without a sound idea in my head. What shall we do if we give up acting altogether?"

"Give up acting altogether, when you like it so! No-no. I will like it too, Grandy. But-but-" she stopped short, afraid to imply blame or to give pain.

"But what-let us make clean breasts, one to the other : tell truth. and shame the Father of Lies."

"Tell truth," said Sophy, lifting up to him her pure eyes with such heavenly, loving, kindness, that if the words did imply reproof, the eyes stole it away. "Could we but manage to tell truth off the stage, I should not dislike acting! grandfather, when that kind gentleman and his lady and those merry children come up and speak to us. don't you feel ready to creep into the earth?-I do. Are we telling truth? are we living truth? one name to-day, another name to-morrow? I should not mind acting on a stage or in a room, for the time, but always acting, always-we ourselves 'make-beliefs!' Grandfather, must that be! They don't do it; I mean by they, all who are good and looked up to and respected, as-as-Oh, Grandy-Grandy-what am I saving? I have pained you."

Waife indeed was striving hard to keep down emotion; but his lips were set firmly and the blood had left them, and his hands were trem-

"We must hide ourselves," he said in a very low voice, "we must take false names-I-because-because of reasons I can't tell even to that you mended? So we would ought to be; and there is one who, care of, and sell the herbs and vegeany day, could take you away from all, the last fortnight, a hundred such a careful, prudent house- | me, if he found you out-and soand so," He paused abruptly, looked at her fearful wondering soft face, and, rising, drew himself up with one of those rare outbreaks of dignity which elevated the whole character of his person. "But as for me," said he, "if I have lost all name,-if, while I live, I must be this wandering, skulking outcastlook above, Sophy-look up above; there all secrets will be known-all hearts read—and there my best hope to find a place in which I may wait your coming, is, in what has lost me all birthright here. Not to exalt myself do I say this-no; but that you may have comfort, darling, if ever hereafter you are pained by what men say to you of me."

As he spoke, the expression of his face, at first solemn and lofty, relaxed into melancholy submission. Then passing his arm into hers, and leaning on it as if sunk once more into the broken cripple needing her frail support, he drew her forth from the arbour, and paced the little garden slowly, painfully. At length he seemed to recover himself, and said in his ordinary cheerful tone. "But to the point in question, suppose we have done with acting and roaming. and keep to one name, and settle somewhere like plain folks, again I ask-how shall we live?"

" I have been thinking of that." answered Sophy. "You remember that those good Miss Burtons taught me all kinds of needlework, and I know people can make money by needlework. And then, Grandy dear, what can't you do? Do you forget Mrs. Saunders' books that you bound, and her cups and saucers you - and you, because I failed both work, and have a little cottage to get you a proper home, where you and a garden, that we could take if he pleases, and he may please it tables. Oh, I have thought over it hundred times, only I did not dare | retired from it. 'Twas there I to speak first."

Waife listened very attentively. "I can make very good baskets," said he, rubbing his chin, "famous baskets (if one could hire a bit of osier ground), and, as you say, there might be other fancy articles I could turn out prettily enough, and you could work samplers, and urn-rugs, and doyleys, and pin-cushions, and so forth; and what with a rood or two of garden-ground, and poultry (the Mayor says poultry is healthy for children), upon my word, if we could find a safe place, and people would not trouble us with their gossipand we could save a little money for you when I am-"

" Bees too-honey?" interrupted Sophy, growing more and more interested and excited.

" Yes, bees-certainly. A cottage of that kind in a village would not be above £6 a-year, and £20 spent on materials for fancy-works would set us up. Ah! but furniturebeds and tables-monstrous dear!" "O no, very little would do at first."

"Let us count the money we have left," said Waife, throwing himself down on a piece of sward that encircled a shady mulberry-tree. Old man and child counted the money. bit by bit, gaily yet anxiously-babbling, interrupting each other scheme upon scheme; they forgot past and present as much as in acting plays-they were absorbed in the future-innocent simple future -innocent as the future planned by two infants fresh from Robinson Crusoe or fairy tales.

" I remember-I remember; just the place for us," cried Waife, sudtown, but in a pretty village quite and the birds sing."

learned to make baskets. I had broken my leg-fall from a horsenothing to do. I lodged with an old basket-maker; he had a capital trade. Rivulet at the back of his house: reeds, osiers, plentiful. I see them now, as I saw them from my little casement while my leg was setting. And Lizzy used to write to me such dear letters : my baskets were all for her. We had baskets enough to have furnished a house with baskets; could have dined in baskets, sat in baskets, slept in baskets. With a few lessons I could soon recover the knack of the work. I should like to see the place again : it would be shaking hands with my youth once more. None who could possibly recognise me could be now living. Saw no one but the surgeon, the basket-maker, and his wife; all so old, they must be long since gathered to their fathers. Perhans no one carries on the basket trade now. I may revive it and have it all to myself: perhaps the cottage itself may be easily hired." Thus, ever disposed to be sanguine, the vagabond chattered on, Sophy listening fondly, and smiling up to his face. "And a fine large park close by; the owners, great lords, deserted it then : perhaps it is deserted still. You might wander over it as if it were your own, Sophy. Such wonderful trees-such green solitudes; and pretty shy hares running across the vistas-stately deer too! We will make friends with the lodgekeepers, and we will call the park yours. Sophy: and I shall be a genius who weaves magical baskets, and you shall be the enchanted denly. "It is many, many, many princess concealed from all evil eyes, years since I was there; I was knitting doyleys of pearl under courting my Lizzy at the time- leaves of emerald, and catching no alas-alas! But no sad thoughts sound from the world of perishable now !- just the place, near a large life, except as the boughs whisper thought you were lost," said the It seems not hospitable like, your bailiff's wife; "tea is waiting for going away at the dead of night you, and there's husband, sir, com- thus. But I understand you don't ing up from his work; he'll be proud like crying, sir-we men don't; and and glad to know you, sir, and you your sweet little girl. I dare say, too, my dear; we have no children would sob, ready to break her heart, of our own.

pleasurable than she had long dearly-so do I. Good night." Isaac.

again when you come back."

speak.

"You are sure you will find your of a hedgerow, to the sheltering way-no, that's the wrong turn- eaves of a haystack; and under that straight on to the town. They'll be roof-tree he and Sir Isaac lay down sitting up for you at the Saracen's to rest.

"Dear me, here you are - we | Head, I suppose; of course, sir? if she knew. Fine moonlight night, It is past eleven. Sophy, worn sir-straight on. And I say, don't out, but with emotions far more fret about her : wife loves children known, is fast asleep. Waife kneels On went Waife-lamely, slowlyby her side, looking at her. He Sir Isaac's white coat gleaming in touches her hand, so cool and soft the moon, ghostlike. On he went, -all fever gone; he rises on tiptoe his bundle strapped across his shoul--he bends over her forehead-a der, leaning on his staff, along by kiss there, and a tear; he steals the folded sheep and the sleeping away, down, down the stairs. At cattle. But when he got into the the porch is the bailiff, holding Sir high-road, Gatesboro' full before him, with all its roofs and spires, he "We'll take all care of her," said turned his back on the town, and Mr. Gooch, "You'll not know her tramped once more along the desert thoroughfare - more slowly, and Waife pressed the hand of his more; more lamely-and more; grandchild's host, but did not till several milestones were passed; and then he crept through the gap

CHAPTER XXIV.

Laugh at forebodings of evil, but tremble after day-dreams of happiness.

on a chair beside her bed.

WAIFE left behind him at the cot- But, in case of accident, I have left tage two letters-one intrusted to with Mr. Gooch, sealed up, the the bailiff, with a sealed bag, for money we made at Gatesboro', after Mr. Hartopp-one for Sophy, placed paying the inn bill, doctor, &c., and retaining the mere trifle I need in The first letter was as follows.— | case I and Sir Isaac fail to support "I trust, dear and honoured sir, ourselves. You will kindly take that I shall come back safely; and care of it. I should not feel safe when I do. I may have found per- with more money about me, an old haps a home for her, and some way man. I might be robbed ; besides, I of life such as you would not blame. am careless. I never can keep money; it slips out of my hands still. So when at last she shook off like an eel. Heaven bless you, sir; your kindness seems like a miracle vouchsafed to me for that child's dear sake. No evil can chance to her with you; and if I should fall ill and die, even then you, who would have aided the tricksome vagraut, will not grudge the saving hand to the harmless child."

The letter to Sophy ran thus.-"Darling, forgive me; I have stolen away from you, but only for a few days, and only in order to see if we cannot gain the magic home where I am to be the Genius, and you the Princess. I go forth with such a light heart, Sophy dear. I shall be walking thirty miles a-day, and not feel an ache in the lame leg: you could not keep up with me -you know you could not, think over the cottage and the basket-work, and practise at samplers and pin-cushions, when it is too hot to play; and be stout and strong against I come back. That, I trust, will be this day week-'tis but seven days; and then we will only act fairy dramas to nodding trees, with linnets for the orchestra; and even Sir Isaac shall not be demeaned by mercenary tricks, but shall employ his arithmetical talents in casting up the weekly bills, and he shall never stand on his hind-legs except on sunny days, when he shall carry a parasol to shade an enchanted princess. Laugh, darling-let me fancy I see you laughing; but don't fret-don't fanoy I desert you. Do try and get well-quite, quite well: I ask it of you on my knees."

The letter and the bag were taken over at sunrise to Mr. Hartopp's woke up to labour, noiseless and sleep, and tossing her hair from her blue eyes, looked round and became conscious of the strange place, she still fancied the hour early. But she got up, drew the curtain from the window, saw the sun high in the heavens, and, ashamed of her laziness, turned, and lo! the letter on the chair! Her heart at once misgave her; the truth flashed upon a reason prematurely quick in the intuition which belongs to the union of sensitive affection and active thought. She drew a long breath, and turned deadly pale. It was some minutes before she could take up the letter, before she could break the seal. When she did, she read on noiselessly, her tears droping over the page, without effort or sob. She had no egotistical sorrow. no grief in being left alone with strangers; it was the pathos of the old man's lonely wanderings, of his bereavement of his counterfeit glee, and genuine self-sacrifice-this it was that suffused her whole heart with unutterable yearnings of tenderness, gratitude, pity, veneration. But when she had wept silently for some time, she kissed the letter with devout passion, and turned to that Heaven to which the outcast had taught her first to pray.

Afterwards she stood still, musing a little while, and the sorrowful shade gradually left her face. Yes: she would obey him-she would not fret-she would try and get well and strong. He would feel, at the distance, that she was true to his wishes-that she was fitting herself to be again his companion ;-seven days would soon pass. Hope, that villa. Mr. Hartopp was an early can never long guit the heart of man. Sophy overslept herself; her childhood, brightened over her meroom was to the west; the morning ditations, as the morning sun over beams did not reach its windows; a landscape that just before had lain and the cottage without children sad amidst twilight and under rains.

When she came down-stairs, Mrs.

which, after the morning meal, she moved about by the good woman's side, assisting her in her dairy-work and other housewife tasks, talking little.comprehending quickly-composed, cheerful.

"I am so glad to see you don't pine after your good grandpapa, as we feared you would."

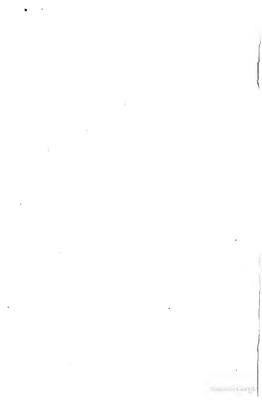

"He told me not to pine," answered Sophy, simply, but with a quivering lip.

When the noon deepened, and it became too warm for exercise, Sophy timidly asked if Mrs. Gooch had any worsteds and knitting-needles, and being accommodated with those implements and materials, she withdrew to the arbour, and seated herself to work-solitary and tranquil.

What made, perhaps, the chief strength in this poor child's nature was its intense trustfulness-a part. perhaps, of its instinctive appreciation of truth. She trusted in Waife -in the future-in Providence-in her own childish, not helpless, self. Already, as her slight fingers sorted the worsteds, and her graceful taste shaded their hues into blended harmony, her mind was weaving, not less harmoniously, the hues in the woof of dreams: the cottage home-the harmless tasks-Waife, with his pipe. in the arm-chair, under some porch, covered, like that one yonder- sant surprise for you, Sophy, my why not?-with fragrant woodbine. love!" said Mrs. Crane.

Gooch was pleased and surprised to And life, if humble, honest, truthobserve the placid smile upon her ful, not shrinking from the day, so face, and the quiet activity with that, if Lionel met her again, she should not blush, nor he be shocked. And if their ways were so different as her grandfather said, still they might cross, as they had crossed before, and-the work slid from her hand-the sweet lips parted, smiling; -a picture came before her eyesher grandfather, Lionel, herself; all three, friends, and happy; a stream, fair as the Thames had seemedgreen trees all bathed in summerthe boat gliding by: in that boat they three, borne softly on-awayaway-what matters whither ?-by her side the old man :- facing her. the boy's bright, kind eyes. She started. She heard noises-a swinging gate-footsteps. She startedshe rose-voices:-one strange to her - a man's voice, - then the Mayor's, A third voice-shrill, stern :- a terrible voice-heard in infancy-associated with images of cruelty, misery, woe. It could not be! - impossible! Near - nearer came the footsteps. Seized with the impulse of flight, she sprang to the mouth of the arbour. Fronting her, glared two dark, baleful eyes. She stood-arrested-spell-bound-as a bird fixed rigid by the gaze of a serpent.

"Yes, Mr. Mayor; all right !- it is our little girl-our dear Sophy. This way, Mr. Losely. Such a plea-

BOOK IV.-CHAPTER I.

In the kindliest natures there is a certain sensitiveness, which, when wounded, occasions the same pain, and bequeathes the same resentment, as mortified vanity or galled self-love.

the hour of five in the evening, Mr. become the tokens of disturbance Hartopp, alone in the parlour be- occasioned by that infamous conhind his warehouse, is locking up enssion. Everywhere a sullen look his books and ledgers preparatory to -everywhere that ineffable aspect the return to his villa. There is a of crestfallenness! What can have certain change in the expression of happened? is the good man bankhis countenance since we saw it last, rupt? No-rich as ever! What look sullen-sullen he looks; if it be which they who love Josiah Harto be crestfallen-crestfallen he is. That smooth existence has surely received some fatal concussion, and has not yet recovered the shock. orders in the warehouse, at the warehonsemen themselves, at the rough faces in the tan-yard-nay, at Mike Callaghan, who has just brought a parcel from the railway. all of them have evidently shared in the effects of the concussion; all of them wear a look more or less sullen; all seem crestfallen. Nay, could you carry your gaze farther on-could you peep into the shops could you extend the vision farther vants, and his maid-servants-more fallen, jarred on his whole system.

It is exactly that day week, towards and more impressively general would If it be possible for Mr. Hartopp to can it be? Reader! that fatal event possible for the Mayor of Gatesboro' topp are ever at watch to prevent. despite all their vigilance, has occurred! Josiah Hartopp has been TAKEN IN! Other men may be occasionally taken in, and no one But, if you will glance beyond the monras-perhaps they deserve it! parlour at Mr. Williams giving they are not especially benevolent, or they set up to be specially wise. But to take in that Lamb! And it was not only the Mayor's heart that was wounded, but his pride, his selfesteem, his sense of dignity, were terribly humiliated. For as we know, though all the world considered Mr. Hartopp the very man born to be taken in, and therefore combined to protect him, yet in his secret soul Mr. Hartopp considered in the High Street, or at the that no man less needed such proloungers in the city reading-room; tection; that he was never taken in, unless he meant to be so. Thus the still-to Mr. Hartopp's villa, behold cruelty and ingratitude of the base his wife, his little ones, his men-ser- action under which his crest was so Nay, more, he could not but feel tor of the hardest. He felt not only that the event would long affect subjugated, but indignant at the his personal comfort and indepen- consciousness of being so. He was dence; he would be more than ever too meekly convinced of Heaven's under the affectionate tyranny of unerring justice not to feel assured Mr. Williams-more than ever be that the man who had taken him in an object of universal surveillance would come to a tragic end. He and espionage. There would be would not have hanged that man one thought paramount throughout with his own hands-he was too Gatesboro'. "The Mayor, God bless mild for vengeance. But if he had him! has been taken in-this must seen that man hanging, he would not occur again! or Gatesboro' is have said piously, "Fitting retribudishonoured, and Virtue indeed a tion," and passed on his way soothed name!" Mr. Hartopp felt not only and comforted. Taken in!-taken mortified but subjugated-he who in at last! - he, Josiah Hartopp, had hitherto been the soft subjuga- taken in by a fellow with one eye!

CHAPTER II.

The Mayor is so protected that he cannot help himself.

not?"

A COMMOTION without-a kind of dignity and self-possession. "I am howl-a kind of hoot. Mr. Williams astonished at your-your--the warehousemen, the tanners, Mike Callaghan, share between them the howl and the hoot. The Mayor started-is it possible! His door is answer me, man!" burst open, and, scattering all who sought to hold him back-scattering them to the right and left from his massive torso, in rushed the man who had taken in the Mayor-the fellow with one eve, and with that fellow, shaggy and travel-soiled, the other dog!

"What have you done with the charge I intrusted to you? My child-my child-where is she?" Waife's face was wild with the agony of his emotions, and his voice was so sharply terrible that it went like a knife into the heart of the men, who, thrust aside for the moment, now followed him, fearful, deuce do you do here?" growled into the room.

the Mayor, striving hard to recover I'll take care of him !"

"Audacity!" interposed Mr. Williams. "My child-my Sophy-my child!

"Sir," said the Mayor, drawing himself up, "have you not got the note which I left at my bailiff's cottage in case you called there?"

"Your note-this thing!" said Waife, striking a crumpled paper with his hand, and running his eye over its contents. "You have rendered up, you say, the child to her lawful protector? Gracious heavens! did I trust her to you, or "Leave the room all of you," said the Mayor, with a sudden return of his usual calm vigour.

"You go - you, sirs; what the Williams to the meaner throng. "Mr .- Mr. Chapman, sir," faltered "Out!-I stay; never fear, men,

The bystanders surlily slinked off, | first to give her up, even to her own but none returned to their work; father; at first insisted upon waiting they stood within reach of call by the shut door. Williams tucked up his coat-sleeves, clenched his fists, hung his head doggedly on one side. and looked altogether so pugnacious and minatory, that Sir Isaac, who, though in a state of great excitement, had hitherto retained selfcontrol, peered at him under his curls, stiffened his back, showed his teeth, and growled formidably.

"My good Williams, leave us." said the Mayor; "I would be alone with this person."

"Alone-you! out of the question. Now you have been once taken in, and you own it-it is my duty to protect you henceforth; and I will to the end of my days."

The Mayor sighed heavily-"Well, Williams, well !- take a chair, and be quiet. Now, Mr. Chapman, so to call you still; you have deceived me."

" I-how ?"

The Mayor was puzzled. ceived me," he said at last, "in my knowledge of human nature. thought you an honest man, sir, And you are-but no matter."

WAIFE(impatiently) .- "Mychild, my child! you have given her up to -to-"

MAYOR .- "Her own father, sir. " WAIFE (echoing the words as he staggers back) .- "I thought so-I thought it!" MAYOR .- "In so doing I obeyed the law-he had legal power to enforce his demand." The Mayor's voice was almost apologetic in its tone, for he was affected by Waife's anguish, and not able to silence a pang of remorse. After all, he had been trusted; and he had, excusably perhaps, necessarily perhaps, but still he had failed to fulfil the trust. "But," added the Mayor, as if re- he would have given ten times the till your return; and it was only when I was informed what you yourself were, that my scruples gave way."

Waife remained long silent, breathing very hard, passing his hand several times over his forehead; at last he said more quietly than he had yet spoken-" Will you tell me where they have gone?"

"I do not know; and if I did know, I would not tell you! Are they not right when they say that that innocent child should not be tempted away by-by-a-in short by you, sir?"

" They said! Her father-said that !- he said that ! Did he-did he say it? Had he the heart?"

MAYOR .- "No, I don't think he said it. Eh, Mr Williams? He spoke little to me!"

MR. WILLIAMS .- "Of course he would not expose that person. But the woman-the lady, I mean."

WAIFE .- "Woman! Ab, yes. The bailiff's wife said there was a What woman? What's her name?"

MAYOR .- " Really you must exouse me. I can say no more. I have consented to see you thus, because whatever you might have been, or may be, still it was due to myself to explain how I came to give up the child; and, besides, you left money with me, and that, at least, I can give to your own hand."

The Mayor turned to his desk. unlocked it, and drew forth the bag which Waife had sent to him.

As he extended it towards the Comedian, his hand trembled and his cheek flushed. For Waife's one bright eye had in it such depth of reproach, that again the Mayor's conscience was sorely troubled, and assuring himself-"but I refused at contents of that bag to have been alone with the vagrant, and to have | cold comfortless thrill. "He does said the soothing things he did not look like it," said the foreman. dare to say before Williams, who sate there mute and grim, guarding him from being once more "taken in." "If you had confided in me at first, Mr. Chapman," he said, pathetically, "or even if now, I could aid von in an honest way of life !" "Aid him-now!" said Williams.

with a snort. "At it again! yon're not a man, you're an angel !"

"But if he is penitent, Williams." "So! so! so!" murmured Waife, "Thank Heaven it was not he who spoke against me-it was but a strange woman. Oh!" he suddenly broke off with a groan. "Oh-but that strange woman-who, what can she be? and Sophy with her and him. Distraction! Yes, yes, I take the money. I shall want it all. Sir Isaac, pick up that bag. Gentlemen. good-day to you !" He bowed; such a failure that bow! Nothing ducal in it! bowed and turned towards the door; then, when he gained the threshold, as if some meeker, holier thought restored to him dignity of bearing, his form rose, though his face softened, and stretching his said :- " You did but as all perhaps would have done on the evidence to her. If you knew all, how you forgive you."

transfixed. Even Williams felt a live?"

"Cheer up, sir, no wonder you were taken in - who would not have been ?"

"Hark! that hoot again. Go. Williams, don't let the men insult him. Go. do-I shall be grateful."

But before Williams got to the door, the cripple and his dog had vanished: vanished down a dark narrow alley on the opposite side of the street. The rude workmen had followed him to the mouth of the alley, mocking him. Of the exact charge against the Comedian's good name they were not informed: that knowledge was confined to the Mayor and Mr. Williams. But the latter had dropped such harsh expressions, that bad as the charge might really be, all in Mr. Hartopp's employment probably deemed it worse, if possible, than it really was, And wretch indeed must be the man by whom the Mayor had been confessedly taken in, and whom the Mayor had indignantly given up to thereproaches of his own conscience. But the cripple was now out of sight, lost amidst those labyrinths right hand towards the Mayor, he of squalid homes which, in great towns, are thrust beyond view, branching off abruptly behind High before you. You meant to be kind Streets and Market Places, so that strangers passing only along the would repent! I do not blame-I broad thoroughfares, with glittering shops and gas-lit causeways. He was gone: the Mayor stood |-cxclaim, "Where do the Poor voluntary impulse, that Waife, thus reasonable probability that the teescaping from the harsh looks and nant would be a quiet sober man. taunting murmurs of the gossips who would pay his rent, and abstain round the Mayor's door, dived into from poaching. Waife thought he those sordid devious lanes. Vaguely might safely presume that the he felt that a ban was upon him; Mayor of Gatesboro' would not so that the covering he had thrown far as that went, object to take his over his brand of outcast was lifted past upon trust, and give him a good un: that a sentence of expulsion word towards securing so harmless from the High Streets and Market and obscure a future. Waife had Places of decorous life was passed never before asked such a favour of against him. He had been robbed any man; he shrunk from doing so of his child, and Society, speaking in now; but for his grandchild's sake. the voice of the Mayor of Gatesboro', he would waive his scruples or humsaid "Rightly! thou art not fit ble his pride. companion for the innocent!"

CHAPTER III.

Ecce iterum Crispinus!

the town, beyond its straggling suburbs, and once more on the solitary road. He had already walked far that day. He was thoroughly exhausted. He sate himself down in a dry ditch by the hedgerow, and shelter! Little more had he learned taking his head between his hands, strove to re-collect his thoughts, and re-arrange his plans.

Waife had returned that day to the bailiff's cottage joyous and elated. he had diverted his ambition.

ting of the cottage and osier-ground, her-he had no means to conjecture. had, it is true, requested some refer- Most probably (he thought and ence-not, of course, as to all a te- guessed) she would be carried

IT was by no calculation, but by in- nant's antecedents, but as to the

Thus, then, he had come back, At length he found himself out of full of Elysian dreams, to his Sophy -his Enchanted Princess, Gonetaken away, and with the Mayor's consent - the consent of the very man upon whom he had been relying to secure a livelihood and a at the cottage, for Mr. and Mrs. Gooch had been cautioned to be as brief as possible, and give him no clue to regain his lost treasure, beyoud the note which informed him He had spent the week in travelling it was with a lawful possessor. And, -partly, though not all the way, on indeed, the worthy pair were now foot, to the distant village, in which prejudiced against the vagrant, and he had learned in youth the basket- were rude to him. But he had not maker's art! He had found the tarried to cross-examine and inquire. very cottage wherein he had then He had rushed at once to the lodged, vacant, and to be let. There Mayor. Sophy was with one whose seemed a ready opening for the legal right to dispose of her he could humble but pleasant craft to which not question. But where that person would take her - where he The bailiff intrusted with the let- resided - what he would do with him-not Losely ; the woman whose whined. tongue had poisoned Hartopp's mind, and turned into scorn all that cried Waife, and he opened his arms admiring respect which had before to the brute, who bounded forgivgreeted the great Comedian. Why ingly to his breast. was that woman his enemy? Who such direful women as Losely made was laid on his shoulder, and a his confidants and associates, that friendly voice said-Waife had taken Sophy to himself. As for Mrs. Crane, she had never said so! Marbellous!" seemed a foe to him-she had ceded no reason to believe, from the way in which she had spoken of Losely when he last saw her, that she could where she is !" henceforth aid the interests, or share be suppressed. Thus Waife was wholly without one guiding evidence-one groundwork for conjectrack the lost; all he knew was, that she had been given up to a man and more hidden than his own.

Saunders of the dog he had pur- company with Losely and Mrs.

abroad - was already out of the chased, and the dog would have country. But the woman with served to direct them on his path. Losely, he had not heard her de- At that thought he pushed away scribed; his guesses did not turn Sir Isaac, who had been resting his towards Mrs. Crane; the woman head on the old man's knee-pushed was evidently hostile to him-it was him away angrily; the poor dog the woman who had spoken against slunk off in sorrowful surprise, and

"Ungrateful wretch that I am!"

"Come, come, we will go back to could she be? What had she to do the village in Surrey. Tramp, with Sophy? He was half beside tramp!" said the cripple, rousing himself with terror. It was to save himself. And at that moment, just her less even from Losely than from as he gained his fect, a friendly hand

"I have found you! the crystal

"Merle," falterated out the vathe child to him willingly-he had grant-"Merle, you here! Oh, perhaps you come to tell me good news: you have seen Sophy - you know

The Cobbler shook his head. the schemes, of the man whose per- "Can't see her just at present, fidies she then denounced; and as Crystal says nout about her. But to Rugge, he had not appeared at I know she was taken from you-Gatesboro'. Mrs. Crane had pru- and-and-you shake tremenjous! dently suggested that his presence Lean on me, Mr. Waife, and call off would not be propitiatory or dis- that big animal. He's a suspicating creet, and that all reference to him, my calves and circumtittyvating or to the contract with bim, should them. Thank ye, sir. You see I was born with sinister aspects in my Twelfth House, which appertains to big animals and enemies :- and dogs ture - that might enable him to of that size about one's calves aremalefics!"

As Merle now slowly led the cripwhose whereabouts it was difficult ple, and Sir Isaac, relinquishing his to discover-a vagrant, of life darker first suspicions, walked droopingly beside them, the Cobbler began a But how had the hunters dis- long story, much encumbered by covered the place where he had astrological illustrations and moraltreasured up his Sophy-how dog- ising comments. The substance of ged that retreat? Perhaps from the his narrative is thus epitomised: village in which we first saw him. Rugge, in pursuing Waife's track. Ay, doubtless, learned from Mrs. had naturally called on Merle in with more speed than good-breedacquaintance with Mr. Rugge in so well simulated a courtesy, that that gentleman, when left behind by Losely and Mrs. Crane in their journey to Gatesboro', condescended, for want of other company, to drink tea with Mr. Merle: and tea being succeeded by stronger potations, he fairly unbosomed himself of his hopes of recovering Sophy. and his ambition of hiring the York theatre.

The day afterwards Rugge went away seemingly in high spirits, and the Cobbler had no doubt, from some words he let fall in passing Merle's stall towards the railway. that Sophy was recaptured, and that Rugge was summoned to take possession of her. Ascertaining from the manager that Losely and Mrs. Crane had gone to Gatesboro', the Cobbler called to mind that he had a sister living there, married to a greengrocer in a very small way. whom he had not seen for many years; and finding his business slack just then, he resolved to pay this last, as good men always do in this relative a visit, with the benevolent intention of looking up Waife, whom same thing in the long-run." he expected, from Rugge's account. to find there, and offering him any consolation or aid in his power, than an occasional nod of the head should Sophy have been taken from nim against his will. A consultation with his crystal, which showed him the face of Mr. Waife alone, and much dejected, and a horary scheme woman described, and if surprised, which promised success to his jour- he was rejoiced. For much as he ney, decided his movements. He disliked that gentlewoman, he had arrived at Gatesboro' the day thought Sopby might be in worse before, had heard a confused story female hands. Without much need about a Mr. Chapman, with his dog of sagacity, he divined the gist and his child, whom the Mayor had of the truth. Losely had some-

Crane. The Cobbler had no clue to first taken up, but who afterwards. give, and no mind to give it, if clue in some mysterious manner, had he had possessed. But his curiosity taken in the Mayor. Happily, the being roused, he had smothered the darker gossip in the High Street had inclination to dismiss the inquirers not penetrated the back lane in which Merle's sister resided. There, ing, and even refreshed his slight little more was known than the fact that this mysterious stranger had imposed on the wisdom of Gatesboro's learned Institute and enlightened Mayor. Merle, at no loss to identify Waife with Chapman. could only suppose that he had been discovered to be a strolling player in Rugge's exhibition, after pretending to be some much greater man. Such an offence the Cobbler was not disposed to consider heinous. But Mr. Chapman was gone from Gatesboro'. none knew whither: and Merle had not yet ventured to call himself on the chief magistrate of the place, to inquire after a man by whom that august personage had been deceived. "Howsomever," quoth Merle, in conclusion, "I was just standing at my sister's door, with her last babby in my arms, in Scrob Lane, when I saw you pass by like a shot. You were gone while I ran in to give up the babby, who is teething, with malefics in square-gone-clean out of sight, You took one turn, I took another: but you see we meet at world-or the other, which is the > Waife, who had listened to his friend without other interruption or interjectional expletive, was now restored to much of his constitutional mood of sanguine cheerfulness. He recognised Mrs. Crane in the would Sophy be. It could not be he made no answer. very difficult to find out the place in which Rugge was now exhibiting; lie." The poor cripple's lip writhed, and then-ah then! Waife whistled but he still spoke not. to Sir Isaac, tapped his forehead, and smiled triumphantly. Meanwhile the Cobbler had led him back into the suburb, with the kind intention of offering him food and bed several places in the train. Waife for the night at his sister's house. found voice. "So you too, you too But Waife had already formed his desert and despise me! God's will plan; in London, and in London be done!" He moved away-spiritalone, could he be sure to learn less, limping, hiding his face as well where Rugge was now exhibiting; as he could. The porter took the in London there were places at dog from him, to thrust it into one which that information could be of the boxes reserved for such fourgleaned at once. The last train to footed passengers, the metropolis was not gone. He would slink round the town to the friend-I mean the dog-looked station: he and Sir Isaac at that after Sir Isaac wistfully, and crept hour might secure places unnoticed.

Williams explaining to a fellow- instead." burgess just returned to Gatesboro', manner was greatly altered; he gave latter repaid him the fares. "No." believe it."

startled.

"That you are-"

The Cobbler paused, bent forward, the abstract, how or other became acquainted and whispered the rest of the senwith Rugge, and sold Sophy to the tence close in the vagrant's ear. manager. Where Rugge was, there Waife's head fell on his bosom, but

"Speak," cried Merle; "say 'tis a

Merle looked aghast at that obstinate silence. At length, but very slowly, as the warning bell summoned him and Sir Isaac to their Waife thus parted from his last into a third-class carriage, in which When Merle found it was in vain luckily there was no one else. Sudto press him to stay over the night. denly Merle jumped in snatched his the good-hearted Cobbler accom- hand, and pressed it tightly. "I panied him to the train, and, while don't despise, I don't turn my back Waife shrunk into a dark corner, on you; whenever you and the little bought the tickets for dog and one want a home and a friend, come master. As he was paying for these, to Kit Merle as before, and I'll bite he overheard two citizens talking of my tongue out if I ask any more Mr. Chapman. It was indeed Mr. questions of you; I'll ask the stars

The Cobbler had but just time to after a week's absence, how and by splutter out these comforting words, what manner of man Mr. Hartopp and redescend the carriage, when had been taken in. At what Wil- the train put itself into movement, liams said, the Cobbler's cheek paled. and the life-like iron miracle, furning, When he joined the Comedian, his hissing, and screeching, bore off to London its motley convoy of human the tickets without speaking, but beings, each passenger's heart a looked hard into Waife's face, as the mystery to the other, all bound the same road, all wedged close within said the Cobbler suddenly, "I don't the same whirling mechanism; what a separate and distinct world in "Believe what?" asked Waife, each! Such is Civilization! How like we are one to the other in the mass! how strangely dissimilar in

CHAPTER IV.

"If," says a great thinker (DEGERANDO, Du Perfectionment Moral, chapter ix., "On the Difficulties we encounter in Self Study") - "If one concentrates reflection too much on oneself, one ends by no longer seeing anything, or seeing only what one wishes. By the very act, as it were, of capturing oneself, the personage we believe we have seized, escapes, disappears. Nor is it only the complexity of our inner being which obstructs our examination, but its exceeding variability. The investigator's regard should embrace all the sides of the subject, and perseveringly pursue all its phases."

a county town far from Gatesboro', county town. At one of these and in the north of England. The taverns, neither the best nor the races last three days; the first day is worst, and in a small narrow slice of over; it has been a hrilliant specta- a room that seemed rohbed from the cle; the course crowded with the landing-place, sate Mrs. Crane, in carriages of provincial magnates, her iron-grey silk gown. She was the metropolis: blacklegs in great carriages, chaises, flies, carts, vans, telling fortunes; much champagne with a soured, scornful look. For imbibed by the well-bred, much human joy, as for human grief, she soda-water and hrandy by the vulgar. had little sympathy. Life had no Thousands and tens of thousands Saturnalian holidays left for her. have been lost and won; some pau- Some memory in her past had poisome rich men made poor for life. being. Hopes and objects she had and uproar, and coarse oaths, and womanhood, those objects and hopes or favoured guests. The professional If so, partly because women, being speculators of a lower grade have more solitary, brood more unceaspoured back into the county town, ingly over cherished ideas, whether and inns and taverns are crowded. good or evil; partly also, for the Drink is hotly called for at reeking same reason that makes a wicked bars: waiters and chambermaids gentleman, who has lost caste and pass to and fro, with dishes, and character, more irreclaimable than tankards, and bottles in their hands. a wicked clown, low-born and low-All is noise and hustle, and eating hred-viz, that in proportion to the and swilling, and disputation and loss of shame is the gain in reck-slang, wild glee, and wilder despair, lessness; but principally, perhaps, amongst those who come back from because in extreme wickedness there

IT is the race-week in Humherston, the race-course to the inns in the with equestrian betters of note from seated close by the open window, as muster; there have been gaming- and horsemen succeeded each other booths on the ground, and gypsies thick and fast, watching the scene pers have been for the time enriched; soned the well-springs of her social Horses have won fame: some of still, but out of the wrecks of the their owners lost character. Din natural and healthful existence of rude passions-all have had their stood forth exaggerated, intense as hour. The amateurs of the higher are the ruling passions in monoclasses have gone back to dignified mania. A bad woman is popularly country-houses, as courteous hosts said to be worse than a wicked man, is necessarily a distortion of the rea- | again fell upon the crowded street. tomed from the cradle rather to heavy vans or waggons filled with "Can I?" raves out, "I will!" that carriage some great person! cupidity, vanity, love, jealousy, fear, world as it is, Arabella Crane abambition; rarely in civilised, that horred the great, and despised the is, reasoning life, through hate and small for worshipping the great. speculation. But when women are thoroughly depraved and hardened. nine times out of ten it is hatred or revenge that makes them so. Arabella Crane had not, however, attained to that last state of wickedness, which, consistent in evil, is callous to remorse; she was not yet unsexed. In her nature was still that essence, "varying and mutable," which distinguishes woman while womanhood is left to her. And now, as she sate gazing on the throng below, her baggard mind recoiled perhaps from the conscious shadow of the Evil Principle which, invoked as an ally, remains as a destroyer. Her dark front relaxed: she moved always thus!" she muttered-"always this hell here! Even now. if in one large pardon I could inolude the undoer, the earth, myself. and again be human-human, even as those slight triflers or coarse life!"

soning faculty; and man, accus- At that moment three or four reason than to feel, has that faculty operatives or labourers and their more firm against abrupt twists and | wives, coming back from the racelesions than it is in woman; where course, obstructed the way; two virtue may have left him, logio may outriders with satin jackets were still linger; and he may decline to expostulating, cracking their whips, push evil to a point at which it is and seeking to clear space for an clear to his understanding that pro- open carriage with four thoroughfit vanishes and punishment rests; bred impatient horses. Towards while woman, once abandoned to that carriage every gazer from the ill. finds sufficient charm in its mere windows was directing eager eyes: excitement; and, regardless of con- each foot-passenger on the pavesequences, where the man asks, ment lifted his hat-evidently in Thus man may be criminal through Like all who are at war with the revenge; for hate is a profitless in- But still her own fierce dark eyes vestment, and revenge a ruinous mechanically followed those of the vulgar. The carriage bore a marquess's coronet on its panels, and was filled with ladies; two other carriages bearing a similar coronet. and evidently belonging to the same party, were in the rear. Mrs. Crane started. In that first carriage, as it now slowly moved under her very window, and paused a minute or more till the obstructing vehicles in front were marshalled into orderthere flashed upon her eyes a face radiant with female beauty in its most glorious prime. Amongst the orowd at that moment was a blind man, adding to the various discords of the street by a miserable hurdygurdy. In the movement of the in her seat uneasily. "Must it be throng to get nearer to a sight of the ladies in the carriage, this poor creature was thrown forward: the dog that led him, an ugly brute, on his own account or his master's, took fright, broke from the string, and ran under the horses' hoofs, snarling. brawlers that pass yonder! Oh for The horses became restive; the something in common with common blind man made a plunge after his dog, and was all but run over. The Her lips closed, and her eyes lady in the first carriage, alarmed for his safety, rose up from her seat, est. A man still young, decidedly and made her outriders dismount, good -looking, wonderfully welllead away the poor blind man, and dressed, wonderfully well-mounted, restore to him his dog. Thus en- the careless ease of high rank in his gaged, her face shone full upon air and gesture. To the superficial Arabella Crane; and with that face gaze, just what the great Lord of rushed a tide of earlier memories. Long, very long, since she had seen that face, - seen it in those years when she herself, Arabella Crane, was young and handsome.

to realise the idea of the danger he ture, and a sterile mind? had escaped-once more safe, the .lady resumed her seat; and now that the momentary animation of humane fear and womanly compassion passed from her countenance. its expression altered; it took the calm, almost the coldness, of a Greek statue. But with the calm there was a listless melancholy which dazzling Marchioness. Greek sculpture never gives to the Parian stone: stone cannot convey that melancholy-it is the shadow which needs for its substance a living mortal heart.

Crack went the whips: the horses bounded on-the equipage rolled famous day of it!" fast down the street, followed by its satellites. "Well!" said a voice in | in a tone rather of disappointment the street below, "I never saw Lady | than congratulation. Montfort in such beauty. Ah, here comes my lord !" their hats to the cavalcade, the Ay, and I saw my lady!" horsemen generally returned the salutation by simply touching their | window. own - one horseman uncovered happy!" wholly. That one must be the Marquess, the greatest man in those equipage! neatest turn-out I ever parts, with lands stretching away on set eyes on; not happy, indeed! I either side that town for miles and had half a mind to ride up to her miles-a territory which, in feudal carriage and advance a claim to her times, might have alarmed a king, gratitude." He, the civilest, must be the great-

Montfort should be. Look again! In that fair face is there not something that puts you in mind of a florid period which contains a feeble platitude?-something in its very The poor man-who seemed not prettiness that betrays a weak na-

> The cavalcade passed away-the vans and the waggons again usurped the thoroughfare. Arabella Crane left the window, and approached the little looking-glass over the mantel-piece. She gazed upon her own face bitterly-she was comparing it with the features of the

The door was flung open, and Jasper Losely sauntered in, whistling a French air, and flapping the dust from his boots with his kid glove.

"All right," said he, gaily, "A

"You have won," said Mrs. Crane.

"Yes. That £109 of Rugge's has been the making of me. I only Mrs. Crane heard and looked forth | wanted a capital just to start with!" again. A dozen or more gentlemen He flung himself into achair, opened on horseback rode slowly up the his pocket-book, and scrutinised its street; which of these was Lord contents. "Guess," said he sud-Montfort ?-not difficult to distin- denly, "on whose horse I won these guish. As the bystanders lifted two rouleaux? Lord Montfort's!

> "So did I see her from this She did not look

"Not happy! - with such an "Gratitude? Oh, for your part in that miserable affair of which you | much! Rugge ought to take half told map"

"Not a miserable affair for herbut certainly I never got any good from it. Trouble for nothing! Basta. No use looking back."

"No use; but who can help it!" said Arabella Crane, sighing heavily; then, as if eager to change the subject, she added abruptly, "Mr. Rugge has been here twice this morning, highly excited-the child will not act. He says you are bound to make her do so ! "

"Nonsense. That is his look-out. I see after children, indeed ! " MRS. CRANE (with a visible effort).- "Listen to me, Jasper Losely. I have no reason to love that child. as you may suppose. But now that you so desert her, I think I feel compassion for her; and when, this morning, I raised my hand to strike her for her stubborn spirit, and saw her eyes unflinching, and her pale, pale, but fearless face, my arm fell to my side powerless. She will not take to this life without the old man. She will waste away and die."

LOSELY .- " How you bother me! Are you serious? What am I to do ? "

MRS. CRANE,-"You have won money, you say; revoke the contract; pay Rugge back his £100. He is disappointed in his bargain; he will take the money."

LOSELY. - "I daresay he will. indeed. No-I have won to-day, it is true, but I may lose to-morrow, and, besides, I am in want of so many things; when one gets a little money, one has an immediate necessity for more-ha! ha! Still I would not have the child die; and she may grow up to be of use. I buying her off. But £100 is too a fit of merriment, in which there the money, or a quarter, because, if she don't act, I suppose she does eat."

Odious as the man's words were, he said them with a laugh that seemed to render them less revolting -the laugh of a very handsome month, showing teeth still brilliantly white. More comely than usual that day, for he was in great goodhumour, it was difficult to conceive that a man with so healthful and fair an exterior was really quite rotten at heart.

"Your own young laugh," said Arabella Crane, almost tenderly. "I know not how it is, but this day I feel as if I were less old-altered though I be in face and mind. I have allowed myself to pity that child; while I speak, I can pity you. Yes! pity-when I think of what you were. Must you go on thus? To what! Jasper Losely," she continued, sharply, eagerly, clasping her hands-"hear me-I have an income, not large, it is true, but assured; you have nothing but what, as you say, you may lose to-morrow : share my income! Fulfil your solemn promises - marry me. I will forget whose daughter that girl is-I will be a mother to her. And for yourself, give me the right to feel for you again as I once did, and I may find a way to raise you yet-higher than you can raise yourself. I have some wit, Jasper, as you know. At the worst you shall have the pastime, I the toil. In your illness I will nurse you; in your joys I will intrude no share. Whom else can you marry? to whom else could you confide? who else could-" She stopped short as if an adder had stung her, uttering a shriek of tell you what I will do; if, when the rage, of pain; for Jasper Losely, races are over, I find I have gained who had hitherto listened to her, enough to afford it, I will see about stupefied, astounded, here burst into was such undisguised contempt, if not, scold Rugge into letting her such an enjoyment of the ludicrous, alone, Scold somebody - nothing provoked by the idea of the mar- like it, to keep other folks quiet, and riage pressed upon him, that the oneself busy. Adieu! and pray, no insult pierced the woman to her more matrimonial solicitations very soul.

cry of wrathful agony it had caused. Jasper rose, holding his sides, and himself!" surveying himself in the glass, with very different feelings at the sight last words-or had she not heard from those that had made his com- enough? If Losely had turned panion's gaze there a few minutes and beheld her face, would it have before so mournful.

composing himself at last, and only a momentary uneasiness. If wiping his eyes, "excuse me, but Alecto herself had reared over him really when you said whom else her brow horrent with vipers, Jasper could I marry - ha! ha! - it did Losely would have thought he had seem such a capital joke! Marry only to look handsome and say you, my fair Crane! No-put that coaxingly, "Alecto, my dear," and idea out of your head-we know the Fury would have pawned her each other too well for conjugal head-dress to pay his washing-bill. felicity. You love me now; you always did, and always will-that is, woman he had thus so wantonly while we are not tied to each other. Women who once love me, always menace as resolve. And that resolve love me-can't help themselves. I am sure I don't know why, except ment of the hands than in the that I am what they call a villain! aspect of the countenance; those Ha! the clock striking seven-I dine hands,-lean, firm, nervous hands, with a set of fellows I have picked -slowly expanded; then as slowly up on the race-ground; they don't clenched, as if her own thought know me, nor I them; we shall be had taken substance, and she was better acquainted after the third locking it in a clasp-tightly, tightly bottle. Cheer up, Crane; goandscold |-never to be loosened till the pulse Sophy, and make her act if you can; was still.

they frighten me! Gad," added Continuing his laugh, despite that Losely, as he banged the door, "such overtures would frighten Old Nick.

Did Arabella Crane hear those startled back his trivial laugh? "My dear good friend," he said, Possibly; but it would have caused

After all, in the face of the grim incensed, there was not so much was yet more shown in the move-

CHAPTER V.

The most submissive where they love may be the most stubborn where they do not love-Sophy is stubborn to Mr. Rugge-That injured man summons to his side Mrs. Crane, imitating the policy of those potentates who would retrieve the failures of force by the successes of diplomacy.

tion with as many heads as the Author dispose of one head than up springs another.

Sonhy has been bought and paid for-she is now, legally, Mr. Rugge's property. But there was a wise peer who once bought Punch-Punch became his property, and was brought in triumph to his lordship's house. To my lord's great dismay, Punch would not talk. To Rugge's great dismay. Sophy would not act.

Mrs. Crane, they had not lost an hour in removing her from Gatesand wrote to the manager to join them there.

Sophy, once captured, seemed stupefied; she evinced no noisy passion-she made no violent resisand obey a father in Jasper Losely, head, mute and incredulous. That that lady's care. man her father! she did not believe it. Indeed, Jasper took no pains to convince her of the relationship, or win her attachment. He was not the ruling vice of the man was in separated from her grandfather. Mrs.

Mr. Rugge has obtained his ob- his egotism. It was not so much ject. But now comes the question, that he had bad principles and bad "What will he do with it?" Ques- feelings, as that he had no principles and no feelings at all, except as they Hydra; and no sooner does an began, continued, and ended in that system of centralisation, which not more paralyses healthful action in a state, than it does in the individual man. Self-indulgence with him was absolute. He was not without power of keen calculation, not without much cunning. He could conceive a project for some gain far off in the future, and concoct, for its realisation, schemes subtly woven, astutely guarded. But he could not Rendered up to Jasper Losely and secure their success by any longsustained sacrifices of the caprice of one hour or the indolence of the boro' and its neighbourhood. They next. If it had been a great object did not, however, go back to the to him for life to win Sonhy's filial village in which they had left Rugge, affection, he would not have bored but returned straight to London, himself for five minutes each day to gain that object. Besides, he had just enough of shame to render him uneasy at the sight of the child he had deliberately sold. So. after chucking her under the chin, and tance. When she was told to love telling her to be a good girl and be grateful for all that Mrs. Crane had she lifted her eyes to his face-then done for her, and meant still to do, turned them away, and shook her he consigned her almost solely to

When Rugge arrived, and Sophy was informed of her intended destination, she broke silence-her colour went and came quickly-she deunkindly rough-he seemed wholly clared, folding her arms upon her indifferent-probably he was so. For breast, that she would never act if Crane, struck by her manner, sug- Crane to the provincial Elis. Rugge gested to Rugge that it might be as carried off Sonhy to her fellow well, now that she was legally secured to the manager, to humour her wish, and re-engage Waife. Whatever the tale with which, in she was threatened-in vain she was order to obtain Sophy from the deprived of food-in vain shut up Mayor, she had turned that worthy in a dark hole-in vain was the lash magistrate's mind against the Co- held over her. Rugge, tyrant though median, she had not gratified Mr. he was, did not suffer the lash to fall. Rugge by a similar confidence to His self-restraint there might be him. To him she said nothing which humanity - might be fear of the might operate against renewing en- consequences. For the state of her gagements with Waife, if he were so health began to alarm him - she disposed. But Rugge had no faith in a child's firmness, and he had a quest. He wished now that he had strong spite against Waife, so he obstinately refused. He insisted however, as a peremptory condition of the bargain, that Mr. Losely and tised the Young Phenomenon; pla-Mrs. Crane should accompany him carded the walls with the name of to the town to which he had transferred his troop, both in order by their presence to confirm his authority over Sophy, and to sanction his claim to her, should Waife reappear and dispute it. For Rugge's profession being scarcely legitimate, and decidedly equivocal, his right to bring up a female child to the same calling might be called into question before a magistrate, and necessitate the production of her father in order to substantiate the special contract. In return, the manager handsomely offered to Mr. Losely and Mrs. Crane to pay their expenses in the excursion-a liberality haughtily rejected by Mrs. Crane for herself, though she agreed at her own charge to accompany Losely if he decided on complying with the manager's request. Losely at first raised objections, but hearing that there would both on the stage and off it. Off it, be races in the neighbourhood, and he had one favoured phrase, hackhaving a peculiar passion for betting neved, but effective. "You are too and all kinds of gambling, as well as pretty to be so cruel." Thrice he an ardent desire to enjoy his £100 now repeated that phrase, with a in so fashionable a manner, he con- simper between each repetition that sented to delay his return to the might have melted a heart of stone. Continent, and attend Arabella Behind Sophy's chair, and sticking "orphans."

AND SOPHY WOULD NOT ACT! In vain she was coaxed-in vain might die-there might be an intaken Mrs. Crane's suggestion, and re-engaged Waife. But where was Waife? Meanwhile he had adver-Juliet Araminta; got up the piece of the Remorseless Baron, with a new rock-scene. As Waife had had nothing to say in that drama, so any one could act his part.

The first performance was announced for that night-there would be such an audience-the best seats even now pre-engaged-first night of the race-week. The clock had struck seven-the performance began at eight. AND SOPHY WOULD

NOT ACT !

The child was seated in a space that served for the green-room, behind the scenes. The whole company had been convened to persuade or shame her out of her obstinacy. The king's lieutenant. the seductive personage of the troop, was on one knee to her, like a lover. He was accustomed to lovers' parts, stood the senior matron of the estab- hands on the child's shoulders, and lishment-not a bad sort of woman looked her in the face without speak--who kept the dresses, nursed the ing. The child as firmly returned the sick, revered Rugge, told fortunes gaze. Give that child a martyr's on a pack of cards which she always cause, and in that frail body there kept in her pocket, and acted occa- would have been a martyr's soul. sionally in parts where age was no Arabella Crane, not inexperienced drawback and ugliness desirable- in children, recognised a power of such as a witch, or duenna, or whatever in the dialogue was poetically force, in that tranquillity of evecalled "Hag." Indeed, Hag was the spark of calm light in its tender the name she usually took from blue-blue, pure as the sky; light, Rugge-that which she bore from steadfast as the star. her defunct husband was Gormerick. This lady, as she braided the gar- said Mrs. Crane. "I will take her land, was also bent on the soothing to your private room, Mr. Rugge;" system, saying, with great sweetness, and she led the child away to a sort considering that her mouth was full of recess, room it could not be rightly of pins, "Now, deary-now, dovey called, fenced round with boxes and -look at ooself in the glass; we crates, and containing the manager's could beat oo, and pinch oo, and stick pins into oo, dovey, but we "My eyes, what a beauty!"

thrust in his bosom, contemplated that their cajoleries were unsuccess--you will act, eh!"

"No," said Sophy, suddenly rising: and, tearing the wreath from her hair, she set her small foot on it with force. "No! not if you kill me!" "Gods!" faltered Rugge. "And the sum I have paid! I am diddled! Who has gone for Mrs. Crane?" "Tom." said the clown.

The word was scarcely out of the clown's month ere Mrs. Crane herself emerged from a side scene, and, calico-flowers into the child's tresses, putting off her bonnet, laid both will stronger than the power of brute

> "Leave her to me, all of yon," desk and two stools.

"Sophy," then said Mrs. Crane. won't. Dovey will be good, I know;" "you say you will not act unless and a great patch of rouge came your grandfather be with you. Now. on the child's pale cheeks. The hear me. You know that I have clown therewith, squatting before been always stern and hard with her with his hands on his knees, you. I never professed to love you grinned lustily, and shricked out -- nor do I. But you have not found me untruthful. When I say a thing Rugge, meanwhile, one hand seriously, as I am speaking now, you may believe me. Act to-night and the diplomatic efforts of his mini- I will promise you faithfully that I sters, and saw, by Sophy's com- will either bring your grandfather pressed lips and unwinking eyes, here, or I will order it so that you shall be restored to him. If you ful. He approached and hissed into refuse, I make no threat, but I shall her ear-"Don't madden me ! don't leave this place; and my belief is that you will be your grandfather's death."

> "His death-his death-I!" "By first dying yourself. Oh, you smile: you think it would be happiness to die. What matter that the old man you profess to care for is broken-hearted! Brat, leave selfishness to boys -- you are a girl!--Suffer!"

"Selfish!" murmured Sophy, " selfish! that was said of me before. Selfish !- ah, I understand. No, I ought not to wish to die - what | "There, she will act. Put on the would become of him?" She fell wreath. Trick her out. Hark ve. on her knees, and raising both her Mr. Rugge. This is for one night. clasped hands, prayed inly, silently— I have made conditions with her: an instant, not more. She rose, "If either you must take back her I do act, then-it is a promise-vou grandfather, or-she must return will keep it. I shall see him-he to him." shall know where I am - we shall meet 1 39

"A promise-sacred. I will keep repaid you." it. Oh, girl, how much you will love some day - how your heart will York Theatre? Ambition of my ache! and when you are my age, life, ma'am! Dreamed of it thrice! look at that heart, then at your Ha! but she will act, and succeed. glass-perhaps you may be, within But to take back the old vagabond and without, like me."

Sophy-innocent Sophy-stared, with me! Ma'am, I'm your grateawe-stricken, but uncomprehending. ful-" Mrs. Crane led her back passive.

"And my £100?" "In the latter case ought to be

"Am I never to have the Royal -a bitter pill! He shall halve it

CHAPTER VI.

Threadbare is the simile which compares the world to a stage. Schiller, less complimentary than Shakespeare, lowers the illustration from a stage to a puppetshow. But ever between realities and shows there is a secret communication, an undetected interchange-sometimes a stern reality in the heart of the ostensible actor, a fantastic stage-play in the brain of the unnoticed spectator. The Bandit's Child on the proscenium is still poor little Sophy, in spite of garlands and rouge. But that honest rough-looking fellow to whom, in respect for services to Sovereign and Country, the apprentice yields way-may he not be-the crafty Comedian !

TARAN-TARANTARA - rub-a-dub- The days have already grown dub-play up horn-roll drum-a somewhat shorter; but it is not yet quarter to eight; and the crowd dusk. How charmingly pretty she already thick before Rugge's Grand still is, despite that horrid paint : Exhibition - "Remorseless Baron but how wasted those poor bare and Bandit's Child! Young Phe- snowy arms! nomenon-Juliet Araminta-Pa- A most doleful lugubrious dirge non !- 'tis she !

"My eyes, there's a beauty!" cries the clown

tronised by the Nobility in general, mingles with the drum and horn.
and expecting daily to be summoned A man has forced his way close by to perform before the Queen-Vivat the stage-a man with a confounded Regina!" - Rub-a-dub-dub. The cracked hurdy-gurdy. Whine company issue from the curtain- whine - creaks the hurdy-gurdy. range in front of the proscenium. "Stop that-stop that mu-zeek." Splendid dresses. The Phenome- cries a delicate apprentice, clapping his hands to his ears.

"Pity a poor blind-" answers the man with the hurdy-gurdy.

"Oh you are blind, are you? but! (if not irreverent the epithet) so inyou got there hy a string?"

" My dog, sir !"

" Deuced ugly one-not like a dog -more like a bear, with horns!" " I sav. master." cries the clown.

"here's a blind man come to see the Phenomenon !"

The crowd laugh: they make way for the blind man's hlack dog. They suspect, from the clown's address, her face, that it would have warmed that the blind man has something your heart for a month to have to do with the company.

You never saw two uglicr specimens of their several species than Author, that that British Tar (galthe hlind man and his hlack dog. lant, no doubt, but hideous) is Gen-He had rough red hair and a red tleman Waife, or that Stygian beard, his face had a sort of twist animal the snowy-curled Sir Isaac? that made every feature seem crooked. His eyes were not ban- them myself, I, the Historian, am daged, but the lids were closed, and puzzled. If it had not been for he lifted them up pitepusly as if that bow-wow, I am sure Sophy seeking for light. He did not seem, would not have suspected. Tarahowever, like a common heggar: tarantara. Walk in, ladies and had rather the appearance of a re- gentlemen, walk in; the performduced sailor. Yes, you would have ance is about to commence! Sophy bet ten to one he had been a sailor. lingers last, not that his dress belonged to that noble calling, but his build, the roll who had been talking to the apprenof his walk, the tie of his cravat, a tice-" Yes, sir," said he, loud and hlue anchor tattoed on that great emphatically, as if his word had brown hand-certainly a sailor-a been questioned. "The child was British tar! poor man.

face and ears were grey, the rest of howl, and-" it a rusty reddish hlack; it had imsire by Cerberus, so portentous, and round her lip into undulating play.

we are not deaf. There's a penny fernal was its aspect, with that grey not to play. What black thing have face, those antiered ears, and its ineffahly weird demeanour altogether. A hig dog, too, and evidently a strong one. All prudent folks would have made way for a man led by that dog. Whine creaked the hurdygurdy, and bow-wow all of a sudden barked the dog. Sophy stifled a cry, pressed her hand to her breast. and such a ray of joy flashed over > seen it. But do you mean to say, Mr. Upon my word, when I look at

"Yes, sir," said the hlind man, snowed up, but luckily the window The dog was hideous enough to of the hut was left open: Exactly have been exhibited as a lusus na- at two o'clock in the morning, that tura,-evidently very aged-for its dog came to the window, set up a

Sophy could hear no more-led mensely long ears, pricked up like away behind the curtain hy the horns; it was a dog that must have King's Lieutenant. But she had heen brought from foreign parts; it heard enough to stir her heart with might have come from Acheron, an emotion that set all the dimples ingly! with what glee and what keeper, made his tea, grilled his gusto! Rugge was beside himself chop, and for company's sake, with pride and rapture. He could shared his meals. Excitement as hardly perform his own Baronial often sharpens the appetite as takes part for admiration. The audience, it away. Rugge had supped on a far choicer and more fastidious hope, and he felt a craving for a one than that in the Surrey village, more substantial breakfast. Accordwas amazed, enthusiastic.

CHAPTER VII.

A Sham carries off the Reality.

York Theatre!" said Rugge, as he took off his wig and laid his head on his pillow. "Restore her for the £100 ! not for thousands!"

Alas, my sweet Sophy; alas! Has not the joy that made thee perform so well undone thee? Ah. hadst thou but had the wit to act horribly, and be hissed!

"Uprose the sun and uprose Baron Rugge."

Not that ordinarily he was a very early man: but his excitement broke his slumbers. He had taken up his quarters on the ground-floor of a small lodging-house close to his exhibition; in the same house lodged his senior Matron, and Sophy herself. Mrs. Gormerick. being ordered to watch the child and never lose sight of her, slept in upper story of the house. The old prudently fainted away.

AND she did act, and how charm- woman served Rugge for houseingly, when he had dressed, he "I shall live to see my dream thrust his head into the passage, come true! I shall have the great and seeing there the maid-of-allwork unbarring the street-door, bade her go up-stairs and wake the Hag, that is, Mrs. Gormerick. Saving this, he extended a key: for he ever took the precaution, before retiring to rest, to lock the door of the room to which Sophy was consigned on the outside, and guard the key till the next morning. The maid nodded, and ascended the stairs. Less time than he expected passed away before Mrs. Gormerick made her appearance, her grey hair streaming under her nightcap, her form endued in a loose wrapper - her very face a tragedy.

"Powers above! What has hanpened?" exclaimed Rugge, prophetically.

"She is gone," sobbed Mrs. Gormerick; and, seeing the lifted arm the same room with Sophy, in the and clenched fist of the manager,

CHAPTER VIII.

Corollaries from the problem suggested in Chapters VI. and VII.

indeed, and Jasper Losely is walking breeches, and boots with tops of a back to his inn from the place at chalky white. Yet, withal, not the which he had dined the evening be- air and walk of a genuine born fore. He has spent the night drink- and bred sporting man, even of the ing, gambling, and though he looks vulgar order. Something about him heated, there is no sign of fatigue. which reveals the pretender. A Nature, in wasting on this man would-be hawk with a pigeon's liver many of her most glorious elements -a would-be sportsman with a of happiness, had not forgotten a Cockney's nurture. herculean constitution-always rest- Samuel Adolphus Poole is an less and never tired, always drinking orphan of respectable connections. pin representing a jockey at full ambition. Still, however, now and

Broad daylight, nearly nine o'clock gallop : cut-away coat, corduroy

and never drunk. Certainly it is His future expectations chiefly rest some consolation to delicate inva- on an uncle from whom, as godlids, that it seldom happens that the father, he takes the loathed name of sickly are very wicked. Criminals Samuel. He prefers to sign himself are generally athletic-constitution Adolphus; he is popularly styled and conscience equally tough; large Dolly. For his present existence he backs to their heads-strong sus- relies ostensibly on his salary as an pensorial muscles-digestions that assistant in the house of a London save them from the overfine nerves tradesman in a fashionable way of of the virtuous. The native animal business. Mr. Latham, his employer, must be vigorous in the human has made a considerable fortune, being, when the moral safeguards less by his shop than by discounting are daringly overleapt. Jasper was the bills of his customers, or of other not alone, but with an acquaintance borrowers whom the loan draws into he had made at the dinner, and the net of the custom. Mr. Iawhom he invited to his inn to tham connives at the sporting tastes breakfast; they were walking fa- of Dolly Poole, Dolly has often miliarly arm-in-arm. Very unlike thus been enabled to pick up useful the brilliant Losely-a young man pieces of information as to the under thirty, who seemed to have names and repute of such denizens washed out all the colours of youth of the sporting world as might apply in dirty water. His eyes dull, their to Mr. Latham for temporary acwhites yellow; his complexion commodation, Dolly Poole has many sodden. His form was thickset and sporting friends; he has also many heavy; his features pug, with a cross debts. He has been a dupe, he is of the buildog. In dress, a speci- now a rogue; but he wants decision men of the flash style of sporting of character to put into practice man, as exhibited on the Turf, or many valuable ideas that his exmore often, perhaps, in the Ring; perience of dupe and his develop-Belcher neckcloth, with an immense ment into rogue suggest to his then, wherever a shabby trick can | be safely done, he is what he calls should know." "lucky." He has conceived a prodigious admiration for Jasper Losely. one cause for which will be explained in the dialogue about to be recorded; play on that first rubber. I cut out. another cause for which is analogous to that loving submission with which some ill-conditioned brute acknowledges a master in the hand that has your game." thrashed it. For at Losely's first appearance at the convivial meeting ment, and leaning significantly on just concluded, being nettled at the imperious airs of superiority which that roysterer assumed, mistaking for effeminacy Jasper's elaborate dandyism, and not recognising in the brave's elegant proportions the tiger-like strength of which, in however, he rejoined without hesitruth, that tiger-like suppleness tation - "French ay! In France should have warned him, Dolly there is more dash in playing out Poole provoked a quarrel, and being trumps than there is with English himself a stout fellow, nor unac- players." customed to athletic exercises, began to spar; the next moment he was at said Poole, still in a half whisper. the other end of the room full sprawl on the floor; and two minutes afterwards, the quarrel made up by conciliating banqueters, with every bone in his skin seeming still to back to it. Poole recoiled, and his rattle, he was generously blubbering out that he never bore malice, and shaking hands with Jasper Losely as if he had found a benefactor. But now to the dislogue.

JASPER,-"Yes, Poole, my hearty. as you say, that fellow trumping my best club lost me the last partner."

POOLE .- "No certainty in every rubber, but next to certainty in the long run, when a man plays as well as you do, Mr. Losely. Your winnings to-night must have been pretty large, though you had a bad partner | young fellows-green." almost every hand ;-pretty large-

JASPER (carelessly). - "Nothing to talk of-a few ponies!"

POOLE .- "More than a few; I

JASPER.-" Why? You did not play after the first rubber."

POOLE .- " No, when I saw your and bet on you; and very grateful to you I am. Still you would win more with a partner who understood

The shrewd Dolly paused a mo-Jasper's arm, added, in a half whisper, "I do; it is a French one."

Jasper did not change colour, but a quick rise of the eyebrow, and a slight jerk of the neck, betraved some little surprise or uneasiness;

"And with a player like you." "more trumps to play out."

Jasper turned round sharp and short: the hard, cruel expression of his mouth, little seen of late, came bones began again to ache. "I did not mean to offend you, Mr. Losely, but to caution."

"Caution!" "There were two knowing coves, who, if they had not been so drunk. would not have lost their money without a row, and they would have rubber. There's no certainty in seen how they lost it; they are sharwhist, if one has a spoon for a pers-you served them right-don't be angry with me. You want a partner-so do I; you play better than I do, but I play well ; you shall have two-thirds of our winnings, and when you come to town I'll introduce you to a pleasant set of > Jasper mused a moment. "You know a thing or two, I see, Master Poole, and we'll discuss the whole subject after breakfast. Arn't you hungry ? - No ! - I am ! Hillo- [he get at her ? It must have been who's that?"

His arm was seized by Mr. Rugge. "She's gone - fled," gasped the manager, breathless, "Out of the lattice-fifteen feet high-not dashed to pieces-vanished."

Go on and order breakfast," said Losely to Mr. Poole, who was listening too inquisitively. He drew the manager away. "Can't you keep your tongue in your head before strangers? the girl is gone ? "

"Out of the lattice, and fifteen feet high!"

"Any sheets left hanging out of the lattice?"

"Sheets! No."

"Then she did not go without help-somebody must have thrown up to her a rope-ladder-nothing so easy-done it myself scores of times for the descent of 'maids who love after such luck as I have had, and the moon,' Mr. Rugge. But at her age there is not a moon-at least there is not a man in the moon; one must dismiss, then, the idea of a rope-ladder-too precocious. But are you quite sure she is gone? not hiding in some cupboard? Sacre! -very odd. Have you seen Mrs. Crane about it?"

"Yes, just come from her; she thinks that villain Waife must have stolen her. But I want you, sir, to come with me to a magistrate."

"Magistrate! I - why? - nonsense-set the police to work,"

"Your deposition that she is your lawful child, lawfully made over to me, is necessary for the Inquisition -I mean Police."

"Hang it, what a bother! I hate magistrates, and all belonging to them. Well, I must breakfast! I'll see to it afterwards. Oblige me by not calling Mr. Waife a villaingood old fellow in his way."

"Good! Powers above!"

preconcerted."

"Ha! true. But she has not been suffered to speak to a soul not in the company-Mrs. Crane excepted." " Perhaps at the performance last night some signal was given?"

"But if Waife had been there I should have seen him; my troop would have known him; such a remarkable face-one eye, too,"

"Well, well, do what you think best. I'll call on you after breakfast; let me go now. Basta !"

Losely wrenched himself from the manager, and strode off to the inn ; then, ere joining Poole, he sought Mrs. Crane.

"This going before a magistrate," said Losely, "to depose that I have made over my child to that blackguard showman-in this town toowhere bright prospects are opening on me, is most disagreeable. And supposing, when we have traced Sophy, she should be really with the old man-awkward! In short, my dear friend, my dear Bella"-(Losely could be very coaxing when it was worth his while)-" you just manage this for me. I have a fellow in the next room waiting to breakfast; as soon as breakfast is over I shall be off to the race-ground, and so shirk that ranting old bore; you'll call on him instead, and settle it somehow." He was out of the room before she could answer.

Mrs. Crane found it no easy matter to soothe the infuriate manager when he heard Losely . was gone to amuse himself at the race-course. Nor did she give herself much trouble to pacify Mr. Rugge's anger, or assist his investigations. Her interest in the whole affair seemed over. Left thus to his own devices, Rugge, however, began "But if he took her off, how did to institute a sharp, and what promised to be an effective investiga- and its heel went within an inch of tion. He ascertained that the fugi- the manager's cheek-bone. Before tive certainly had not left by the Rugge could recover. Losely was in railway, or hy any of the public con- a hand-gallop. But the blind man! veyances; he sent scouts over all Of course Rugge did not find him? the neighbourhood; he enlisted the You are mistaken; he did. The sympathy of the police, who confidently assured him that they had "a network over the three kingdoms;" Rugge's suspicions were directed to Waife-he could collect. however, no evidence to confirm them. No person answering to Waife's description had been seen in the town. Once, indeed, Rugge was close on the right scent; for, insisting upon Waife's one eye and his possession of a white dog, he was told hy several witnesses that a man blind of two eyes, and led by a black dog, had been close before the stage. just previous to the performance. But then the clown had spoken to that very man; all the Thespian company had observed him; all of them had known Waife familiarly for years; and all deposed that any creature more unlike to Waife than the blind man could not be turned out of Nature's workshop. But where was that blind man? They found out the wayside inn in which he had taken a lodging for the night; and there it was ascertained that he had paid for his room beforehand, stating that he should start for the racecourse early in the morning. Rugge himself set out to the race-course to kill two hirds with one stone-catch Mr. Losely-examine the blind man himself.

He did catch Mr. Losely, and very nearly caught something else-for that gentleman was in a ring of noisy horsemen, mounted on a hired hack, and loud as the noisiest. When Rugge came up to his GENIUS! They would as soon have stirrup, and began his harangue, suspected him of being the Cham of Losely turned his back round with Tartary! Nay, candid readers, are so sudden an appliance of bit and there not some of you who refuse to spur, that the animal lashed out, the last to recognise the Man of blind man was there, dog and all. The manager spoke to him, and did not know him from Adam.

Nor have you or I, my venerated readers, any right whatsoever to doubt whether Mr. Rugge could be so stolidly obtuse. Granting that blind sailor to be the veritable William Waife - William Waife was a Man of Genius, taking pains to appear an ordinary mortal. And the anecdotes of Munden, or of Bamfylde Moore Carew, suffice to tell us how Protean is the power of transformation in a man whose genius is mimetic. But how often does it happen to us, venerated readers, not to recognise a Man of Genius, even when he takes no particular pains to escape detection ! A Man of Genius may he for ten years our next-door neighbour-he may dine in company with us twice a-week-his face may be as familiar to our eyes as our arm-chair-his voice to our ears as the click of our parlour-clock - yet we are never more astonished than when all of a sudden, some bright day, it is discovered that our next-door neighbour is-a Man of Genius. Did you ever hear tell of the life of a Man of Genius, but what there were numerous witnesses who deposed to the fact, that until, perfidious dissembler! he flared up and set the Thames on fire, they had never seen anything in him-an odd oreature, perhaps a good creature-probably a poor creature ;-But a Man of Genius, till he has paid his penny to man gets horribly mauled about, Charon, and his passport to immor- and drops from the perch in the tality has been duly examined by midst of the row. Then they shovel the custom-house officers of Styx! him over, clap a great stone on his When one half the world drag forth relics, wine their foreheads, shake that same next-door neighbour, hands, compromise the dispute, the place him on a pedestal, and have one half the world admitting, that him cried, "O yez! O yez! Found though he was a genius he was still a Man of Genius! Public property an ordinary man; the other half -open to inspection!" does not the allowing, that though he was an other half the world put on its spec- ordinary man, he was still a genius. tacles, turn up its nose, and cry, And so on to the next pedestal with "That a Man of Genius, indeed! its "Hic stet," and the next great Pelt him!—pelt him!" Then of stone with its "Hic jacet." course there is a clatter, what the The manager of the Grand Theashied at by his scoffers, the poor Adam!

vulgar call "a shindy," round the trical Exhibition gazed on the blind pedestal. Squeezed by his believers, sailor, and did not know him from

CHAPTER IX.

The aboriginal Man-eater, or Pocket-Cannibal, is susceptible of the refining influences of Civilisation. He decorates his lair with the skins of his victims; he adorns his person with the spoils of those whom he devours. Mr. Losely introduced to Mr. Poole's friends-dresses for dinner; and, combining elegance with appetite, eats them up.

ELATED with the success which had all the world, but which it is convein company with his new friend, Mr. without being honoured by his visits.

rewarded his talents for pecuniary nient to discuss with some confidenspeculation, and dismissing from his tial friend who admires himself too mind all thoughts of the fugitive highly not to respect his secrets, Sophy and the spoliated Rugge, mechanically yields to a woman Jasper Losely returned to London whose wits are superior to his own.

It is true that Jasper, on his re-Poole. He left Arabella Crane to turn to the metropolis, was not perform the same jonrney, unat- magnetically attracted towards Podtended; but that grim lady, carefully | den Place; nay, days and even weeks concealing any resentment at such elapsed, and Mrs. Crane was not want of gallantry, felt assured that gladdened by his presence. But she should not be long in London she knew that her influence was only suspended-not extinot. The body attracted was for the moment In renewing their old acquaint- kept from the body attracting, by ance, Mrs. Crane had contrived to the abnormal weights that had establish over Jasper that kind of dropped into its pockets. Restore influence which a vain man, full of the body thus temporarily counterschemes that are not to be told to poised to its former lightness, and it centre. The apartment he engaged beauty of his countenance might one of those beauish brigands who many a gracilis puer, who had the and paste rings upon unwashed digi- the rare personal strength which, as tals. To do him justice, the man, if in the exuberance of animal so stony-hearted to others, loved and spirits, he would sometimes concherished his own person with ex- descend to display, by feats that quisite tenderness, lavished upon it astonished the curious and frightof bad cigars and ardent spirits. rings - or lifting the weight of so strong, that he could have drunk pitch the said Samuel Dolly out of clean as the form that belied it, Jas- true that he was somewhat impeper Losely had been a saint! His rious, swaggering, bullying-but he apartments secured, his appearance was also off-hand and jocund; and parents designing him to earn his atmosphere. bread in the stables as a light-weight, and therefore mingling his mother's general society. Drawing-rooms milk with heavy liquors. In short, were insipid; clubs full of old fogies. Jasper Losely set up to be a buck "I am for life, my boys," said Mr. about town; in that capacity Dolly Losely-Poole introduced him to several young gentlemen who combined commercial vocations with sporting Mr. Losely, therefore, his hat on one would turn to Podden Place as the | tastes; they could not but particineedle to the Pole. Meanwhile, pate in Poole's admiring and someoblivious of all such natural laws, what envious respect for Jasper the disloyal Jasper had fixed him- Losely. There was indeed about self as far from the reach of the the vigorous miscreant a great deal magnet as from Bloomsbury's re- of false brilliancy. Deteriorated motest verge is St. James's animated from earlier youth though the was showy and commodious. He be, it was still undeniably handadded largely to his wardrobe-his some; and as force of muscle is dressing-case-his trinket-box. Nor, beauty in itself in the eyes of young be it here observed, was Mr. Losely sporting men, so Jasper dazzled wear tawdry scarfs over soiled linen, ambition to become an athlete, with delicate attentions, and gave to it ened the timid-such as bending a the very best he could afford. He poker or horse-shoe between hands was no coarse debauchee, smelling elegantly white, nor unadorned with Cigars, indeed, were not among his Samuel Dolly by the waistband. vices (at worst the rare peccadillo of and holding him at arm's-length, a cigarette) - spirit-drinking was; with a playful bet of ten to one that but the monster's digestion was still he could stand by the fire-place and out a gin palace, and you would only the open window. To know so have sniffed the jasmine or helio- strong a man, so fine an animal, was trope on the dainty cambrio that something to boast of! Then, too, wiped the last drop from his lips, if Jasper had a false brilliancy, he Had his soul been a tenth part as had also a false bonhommie; it was thus revised and embellished, Jas- as you knew him, that side-long per's next care was an equipage in look, that defying gait (look and gait keeping; he hired a smart cabriolet of the man whom the world outs). with a high-stepping horse, and, to wore away. In fact, he had got into go behind it, a groom whose size had a world which did not cut him, and been stunted in infancy by provident his exterior was improved by the side, lounged into the saloons of for it. My uncle Sam is more theatres, accompanied by a cohort anxious about my sins than the of juvenile admirers, their hats on other codgers, because he is my godone side also, and returned to the father, and responsible for my sins, pleasantest little suppers in his own I suppose; and he says he will put apartment. There "the goblet" me in the way of being respectable. flowed-and after the goblet, cigars My head's splitting-" for some, and a rubber for all.

Mr. Losely professed to dislike

" Can sorrow from the goblet flow,

Or pain from Beauty's eye ? "

so blest by the stars his luck, that fellow, uncle Sam! He'll put you his form seemed to wax stronger and his purse fuller by this "life." No makes a man respectable." wonder he was all for a life of that kind: but the slight beings who tried to keep up with him grew thinner and thinner, and poorer and poorer: a few weeks made their cheeks spectral and their pookets a dismal void. Then as some dropped off from sheer inanition, others whom they had decoved by their praises of "Life" and its hero, came into the magic circle to fade and vanish in their turn.

In a space of time incredibly brief. not a whist-player was left upon the field: the victorious Losely had trumped out the last; some few whom Nature had endowed more liberally than Fortune, still retained strength enough to sup-if asked;

"But none who came to sup remained to play."

"Plague on it," said Losely to the coffers! You have rich relathem more useful?"

a martyr to ohronio headache, for tin, I might as well scrape a flint | She has a whelp of a son, who is a

"Wood does split till it is sea-So puissant Losely's vitality, and soned," answered Losely. "Good in the way of tin: nothing else

> "Yes-so he says; a girl with money-"

"A wife-tin canister! Introduce me to her, and she shall be tied to you."

Samuel Dolly did not appear to relish the idea of such an introduction. "I have not been introduced to her myself," said he. "But if you advise me to be spliced, why don't you get spliced yourself? a handsome fellow like you can be at no loss for an heiress."

"Heiresses are the most horrid oheats in the world," said Losely: "there is always some father, or uncle, or fusty Lord Chancellor whose consent is essential, and not to be had. Heiresses in scores have been over head and ears in love with me. Before I left Paris, I sold their locks of hair to a wig-maker-three great trunksful. Honour bright. Poole, as one afternoon they were But there were only two whom I dividing the final spoils, "your could have safely allowed to run friends are mightily soon cleaned away with me; and they were so out; could not even get up double closely watched, poor things, that I dummy last night; and we must hit was forced to leave them to their on some new plan for replenishing fate-early graves! Don't talk to me of heiresses, Dolly, I have been tions; can't I help you to make the victim of heiresses. But a rich widow is an estimable creature. Said Dolly Poole, who was looking | Against widows, if rich, I have not a exceedingly bilious, and had become word to say; and to tell you the truth, there is a widow whom I "My relations are prigs! Some suspect I have fascinated, and whose of them give me the cold shoulder, connection I have a particular priothers-a great deal of jaw. But as vate reason for deeming desirable! spoke in my wheel - were I his thick as pea-jackets, and proof as father-in-law, would not I be a gutta-percha." spoke in his? I'd teach the boy 'life.' Dolly." Here all trace of beauty vanished from Jasper's face, and Poole, staring at him, pushed away his chair, "But,"-continued Losely, regaining his more usual expression of levity and boldness-"But I am not vet quite sure what the widow has besides her son, in her own possession; we shall see. Meanwhile, is there-no chance of a rubber to-night?"

"None: unless you will let Brown and Smith play upon tick." "Pooh! but there's Robinson, he has an aunt he can borrow from?"

"Robinson! spitting blood, with an attack of delirium tremens !- you have done for him."

Poole forced a ghastly smile, while Losely, gaily springing up, swept his share of booty into his pockets, slapped his comrade on the back, and said-"Then, if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain! Hang whist, and up with rouge-etnoir! I have an infallible method of winning-only, it requires capital. You will club your cash with mine, and I'll play for both. Sup here to-night, and we'll go to the --- hell afterwards." Samuel Dolly had the most perfect confidence in his friend's science in the art of gambling, and he did not, therefore, dissent from the proposal made. Jasper gave a fresh "Can sorrow from the goblet touch to his toilette, and stepped flow?" said Losely, "Well, I into his cabriolet. Poole cast on suppose it can-when a man has him a look of envy, and crawled to no coats to his stomach; but you his lodging-too ill for his desk, and and I, Dolly Poole, have stomachs with a strong desire to take to his bed.

CHAPTER X.

" Is there a heart that never loved, Nor felt soft woman's sigh?"

If there be such a heart, it is not in the breast of a Pocket-Cannibal. Your true Man-eater is usually of an amorous temperament : he can be indeed sufficiently fond of a lady to eat her up. Mr. Losely makes the acquaintance of a widow. For further particulars inquire within,

THE dignified serenity of Gloucester | denly started into that exuberant Place, Portman Square, is agitated and aggressive life which irritates by the intrusion of a new inhabi- the nerves of its peaceful neightant. A house in that favoured bours. The bills have been removed locality, which had for several from the windows-the walls have months maintained "the solemn been cleaned down and pointedstillness and the dread repose" which the street-door repainted a lively appertain to dwellings that are to green-workmen have gone in and be let upon lease, unfurnished, sud- out. The observant ladies (single ones) in the house opposite, dis- mother of Lionel Haughton. The cover, by the help of a telescope, letter for that lady which Darrell that the drawing-rooms have been had intrusted to his young cousin. ground - festoon borders, and that language, claimed the right to prothe mouldings of the shutters have vide for her comfortable and honbeen gilt. Gilt shntters! that looks onrable subsistence; and announced ominous of an ostentatious and that, henceforth, £800 a-year would party-giving tenant.

stopped at the door-carpets, tables, an additional sum of £1,200 was chairs, beds, wardrobes - all seem- already there deposited in her name, ingly new, and in no inelegant in order to enable her to furnish taste, have been discorged into the any residence to which she might hall. It has been noticed, too, that be inclined to remove. every day a lady of slight figure and Haughton, therewith, had removed genteel habilaments has come, seemingly to inspect progress-evidently Gloucester Place, Portman Square? not peculiarly vigilant; but its defects are supplied by the voluntary new-comer was a widow; her hussupposed that she had unexpectedly come into a fortune-on the strength of which she had removed from Pimlico into Gloucester Place, At length—the preparations completed -one Monday afternoon the widow, accompanied by her son, come to settle. The next day a footman in genteel livery (brown and orange) appeared at the door. Then, for the rest of the week, the baker and butcher called regularly. On the son appeared at church.

Glonoester Place, the widowed uttered what was silly.

papered, canary - coloured had, in complimentary and cordial be placed quarterly to her account Then carts full of furniture have at Mr. Darrell's banker, and that to Gloucester Place.

She is seated by the window in the new tenant. Sometimes she her front drawing-room-surveying comes alone; sometimes with a with proud though grateful heart dark-eyed handsome lad, probably the elegancies by which she is surher son. Who can she be? what is rounded. A very winning counteshe? what is her name? her his- nance-lively eyes, that in themtory? has she a right to settle in selves may be over-quick and petulant: but their expression is chas-The detective police of London is tened by a gentle kindly mouth. And over the whole face, the attitude, the air, even the dress itself, is efforts of unmarried ladies. The diffused the unmistakable simplicity of a sincere natural character. band had been in the army; of good No doubt Mrs. Haughton has her family: but a mauvais swiet: she tempers and her vanities, and her had been left in straitened circum- little harmless feminine weaknesses; stances with an only son. It was but you could not help feeling in her presence that you were with an affectionate, warmhearted, honest, good woman. She might not have the refinements of tone and manner which stamp the high-bred gentlewoman of convention; she might evince the deficiencies of an imperfect third-rate education; but she was saved from vulgarity by a certain nndefinable grace of person and music of voice-even when she said or did things that well-bred people following Sunday, the lady and her do not say or do; and there was an engaging intelligence in those quick No reader will be at a loss to dis- hazel eyes that made you sure that cover in the new tenant of No. - she was sensible, even when she

Mrs. Haughton turned from the her; and the driver, looking back, interior of the room to the open and muttering to himself-"Not window. She is on the look-out for bad-looking-neatly dressed-ladyher son, who has gone to call on like-French shawl-may have tin Colonel Morley, and who ought to -worth while perhaps!"-gallantly be returned by this time. She begins descended and hastened to offer to get a little fidgety - somewhat apologies, with a respectful hope cross. While thus standing and thus that she was not injured. watchful, there comes thundering down the street a high-stepping what tartly, but heing one of those horse - bay, with white legs - it good-hearted women who, apt to be whirls on a cahriolet - blue, with rude, are extremely sorry for it the vermilion wheels - two hands, in moment afterwards, she wished to yellow kid gloves, are just seen repair any hurt to his feelings occaunder the hood, Mrs. Haughton sioned by her first impulse; and suddenly hlushes and draws in her when, renewing his excuses, he head. Too late! the cabriolet has offered his arm over the crossing, stopped-a gentleman leans forward, she did not like to refuse. On gaintakes off his hat, bows respectfully. ing the side of the way on which "Dear, dear!" murmurs Mrs. her house was situated, she had reco-Haughton, "I do think he is going vered sufficiently to hlush for having to call; some people are born to be accepted such familiar assistance tempted-my temptations have been from a perfect stranger, and someimmense! He is getting out-he knocks-I can't say, now, that I am | for his politeness, not at home-very awkward! I wish Lionel were here! What does he his attractions was not humble, mean-neglecting his own mother. and leaving her a prev to tempters?" faltering voice to the natural effect

While the footman is responding produced by his appearance; and to the smart knock of the visitor, we he himself admiring very much acquaintance. In one of her walks prognostic of "tin," he watched her yet, when she was safe on the pave- much farther?" But Mrs. Haughment, the fright overpowered her ton's bow respondent seemed to nerves, and she clung to the street-declare "not at all!" The stranger post almost fainting. Two or three did not adventure more that day; passers-by humanely gathered round but a day or two afterwards he came

Mrs. Haughton answered somewhat to falter in returning thanks

Our gentleman, whose estimate of ascribed the hlushing cheek and will explain how Mrs. Haughton a handsome bracelet on her wrist. had incurred that gentleman's which he deemed a favourable to her new house while it was in the to her door, and sent his groom in hands of the decorators, her mind the course of the evening to make being much absorbed in the conside- discreet inquiries in the neighbourration whether her drawing-room hood. The result of the inquiries curtains should be chintz or tabouret induced him to resolve noon prose--just as she was crossing the street, cuting the acquaintance thus begun. she was all hut run over by a gen- He contrived to learn the hours at tleman's cahriolet. The horse was which Mrs. Haughton usually visited hard-mouthed, going at full speed. the house, and to pass hy Gloucester The driver pulled up just in time; Place at the very nick of time. His but the wheel grazed her dress, and bow was recognising, respectful, inthough she ran back instinctively, terrogative-a bow that asked "how again into Gloucester Place, on foot. On that occasion Mrs. Haughton was with her son, and the gentleman would not seem to perceive her. The next day he returned; she was then alone, and just as she gained her door, he advanced-"I beg you ten thousand pardons, madam: but if I am rightly informed, I have the honour to address Mrs. Charles Haughton!"

The lady bowed in surprise.

"Ah, madam, your lamented husband was one of my most particular friends."

"You don't say so!" cried Mrs. Haughton: And looking more attentively at the stranger, there was in his dress and appearance something that she thought very stylish; a particular friend of Charles Haughton's was sure to be stylishto be a man of the first water. And she loved the poor Captain's memory, her heart warmed to any "particular friend of his."

"Yes," resumed the gentleman, noting the advantage he had gained, "though I was considerably his junior, we were great cronies excuse that familiar expression-in the Hussars together-"

"The Captain was not in the Hussars, sir; he was in the Guards." "Of course he was; but I was saying-In the Hussars, together with the Guards, there were some very fine fellows-very fine-he was one of them. I could not resist paying my respects to the widowed lady of so fine a fellow. I know it is a liberty, ma'am, but 'tis my way. People who know me well-and I have a large acquaintance-are kind enough to excuse my way. And to think that villanous horse, which I had just bought out of Lord Bolton's been sincerely kindled by the aspect stud - (200 guiness, ma'am, and of her elegant apartments. cheap)-should have nearly taken the life of Charles Haughton's lovely those women, if such there be, who relict. If anybody else had been do not know when a gentleman is driving that brute. I shudder to think what might have been the consequences; but I have a wrist of iron. Strength is a vulgar qualification-very vulgar-but when it saves a lady from perishing, how can one be ashamed of it? But I am detaining you. Your own house, Mrs. Haughton?"

"Yes, sir, I have just taken it, but the workmen have not finished. I am not vet settled here."

"Charming situation! My friend left a son, I believe? In the army already ?"

"No, sir, but he wishes it very much."

"Mr. Darrell, I think, could gratify that wish."

"What! you know Mr. Darrell, that most excellent generous man. All we have we owe to him."

The gentleman abruptly turned aside-wisely-for his expression of face at that praise might have startled Mrs. Haughton.

"Yes, I knew him once. He has had many a fee out of my family. Goodish lawyer-cleverish manand rich as a Jew. I should like to see my old friend's son, ma'am, He must be monstrous handsome with such parents!"

"Oh, sir, very like his father. I shall be proud to present him to you."

"Ma'am, I thank you, I will have the honour to call-"

And thus is explained how Jasper Losely has knocked at Mrs. Haughton's door-has walked up her stairs -has seated himself in her drawing-room, and is now edging his chair somewhat nearer to her, and throwing into his voice and looks a degree of admiration, which has

Jessica Haughton was not one of

speak truth, was she quite insensible pass by, and Colonel Morley had not to his handsome person, nor quite escaped his observation. Colonel unmoved by his flatteries. She had her weak points, and vanity was one men who by name and repute are of them. Nor conceived she, poor sure to be known to all who, like Jaslady, the slightest suspicion that per Losely, in his youth, would fain Jasper Losely was not a personage learn something about that gaudy, whose attentions might flatter any woman. Though he had not even which, like the sun, either vivifies announced a name, but, pushing or corrupts, according to the proaside the footman, had sauntered in with as familiar an ease as if he had shines. Strange to say, it was the been a first cousin; though he had not uttered a syllable that could define his station, or attest his tleman shrink and collapse. Though boasted friendship with the dear Jasper Losely knew himself to be defunct, still Mrs. Haughton implicitly believed that she was with of royal Nature's Lifeguardsmenone of those gay Chiefs of Ton who though confident that from top to had glittered round her Charlie in that earlier morning of his life, ere he had sold ont of the Guards, and bought himself out of jail; a lord, or an honourable at least; and she clad in garments innocent of buckwas even (I shudder to say) revolving in her mind whether it might not be an excellent thing for her dear Lionel if she could prevail on herself to procure for him the prop and guidance of a distinguished and an old clothesman's bag. brilliant father-in-law-rich, noble, evidently good-natured, sensible, atattractive. Oh! but the temptation was growing more and more IMMENSE! when suddenly the door opened, and in sprang Lionel, crying out, " Mother, dear, the Colonel has come with me on purpose to-"

He stopped short, staring hard at Jasper Losely. That gentleman advanced a few steps, extending his hand, but came to an abrupt halt on seeing Colonel Morley's figure now filling up the doorway. Not that he has cost so many words to describefeared recognition-the Colonel did so quick that the Colonel, without not know him by sight, but he knew any apparent pause of dialogue, has making up to them. She knew per- by sight the Colonel. In his own fectly well, that with a very little younger day, when lolling over the encouragement, her visitor would rails of Rotten Row, he had endeclare himself a suitor. Nor, to viously noted the leaders of fashion Morley, indeed, was one of those babbling, and remorseless world perties of the object on which it mere sight of the real fine gentleman that made the mock fine genstill called a magnificent man-one toe his habiliments could defy the criticism of the strictest martinet in polite costume, no sooner did that figure, by no means handsome, and ram, but guilty of wrinkles - appear on the threshold, than Jasper Losely felt small and shabby, as if he had been suddenly reduced to five feet two, and had bought his coat out of

Without appearing even to see Mr. Losely, the Colonel, in his turn. as he glided past him towards Mrs. Haughton, had, with what is proverbially called the corner of the eve, taken the whole of that impostor's superb personnel into calm survey, had read him through and through, and decided on these two points without the slightest hesitation-" a lady-killer and a sharper."

Quick as breathing had been the effect thus severally produced on Mrs. Haughton's visitors, which it acquaintance with an old friend's widow, a young friend's mother."

MRS. HAUGHTON .- "I am sure. Colonel Morley, I am very much flattered. And you, too, knew the poor dear Captain: 'tis so pleasant to think that his old friends come round us now. This gentleman, also, was a particular friend of dear Charles's."

The Colonel had somewhat small eyes, which moved with habitual slowness. He lifted those eyes, let them drop upon Jasper (who still stood in the middle of the room, with one hand still half-extended towards Lionel), and letting the eyes rest there while he spoke, repeated.

" Particular friend of Charles Haughton's - the only one of his particular friends whom I never had the houour to see before."

Jasper, who, whatever his deficiency in other virtues, certainly did not lack courage, made a strong effort at self-possession, and without replying to the Colonel, whose remark had not been directly addressed to himself, said in his most rollicking tone-" Yes, Mrs. Haughton, Charles was my particular friend, but"-lifting his eye-glass-"but this gentleman was," dropping the eye-glass negligently, "not in our set, I suppose." Then advancing to Lionel, and seizing his hand, "I must introduce myself-the image of your father, I declare! I was saying to Mrs. Haughton how much I should like to see you - proposing to her, just as you came in, that we should go to the play together. Oh, ma'am, you may trust him to me safely. Young men should see one of those knowing winks with Mr. Darrell has so expressly - of already taken up the sentence which he was accustomed to delight Lionel left uncompleted, and says, and ensuare the young friends of as he bows over Mrs. Haughton's Mr. Poole, and hurried on: "But in hand, "come on purpose to claim an innocent way, ma'am, such as mothers would approve. We'll fix an evening for it when I have the honour to call again. Good morning, Mrs. Haughton. Your hand again, sir (to Lionel). - Ab, we shall be great friends, I guess! You must let me take you out in my cahteach you to handle the ribbons, eh? 'Gad, my old friend Charles was a whip. Ha! ha! Good-day.

good-day!" Not a muscle had moved in the Colonel's face during Mr. Losely's jovial monologue. But when Jasper had bowed himself out, Mrs. Haughton, curtsying, and ringing the bell for the footman to open the streetdoor, the man of the world (and, as man of the world, Colonel Morley was consummate) again raised those small slow eyes-this time towards her face-and dropped the words,-

"My old friend's particular friend is-not had looking, Mrs. Haughton!"

"And so lively and pleasant," returned Mrs. Haughton, with a slight rise of colour, but no other sign of emharrassment. "It may be a nice acquaintance for Lionel."

" Mother !" cried that ungrateful boy, "you are not speaking seriously. I think the man is odious. If he were not my father's friend. I should say he was-"

"What, Lionel?" asked the Colonel, blandly-" was what?"

"Snobbish, sir."

"Lionel, how dare you!" exclaimed Mrs. Haughton. "What vulgar words boys do pick up at school, Colonel Morley."

"We must be careful that they do not pick up worse than words when they leave school, my dear LIFE." Here Jasper tipped Lionel madam. You will forgive me, but course, with your permission-com- piteously, "I have been to blame, mended this young gentleman to my Colonel, I see it. But Lionel will responsible care and guidance-so tell you how I came to know the openly confided to me his views and gentleman - the gentleman who intentions, that perhaps you would do me the very great favour not to then spoke so kindly about your force upon him, against his own wishes, the acquaintance of-that very good-looking person."

down her rising temper. The Colonel began to awe her.

"By-the-bye," continued the man of the world, "may I inquire the name of my old friend's particular friend?"

"His name - upon my word I really don't know it. Perhaps he left his card-ring the bell, Lionel," you know him, ma'am, and would Charles was my old schoolfellow-a allow your son to see LIFE under little boy when I and Darrell were his auspices! I beg you ten thousand pardons; but even ladies the most cautious, mothers the most watchful, are exposed to-"

-to-to-"

"I understand perfectly, my dear Mrs. Haughton."

The footman appeared. "Did left Lionel fatherless." that gentleman leave a card?" "No. ma'am."

"Did not you ask his name when he entered?"

"Yes, ma'am, but he said he would announce himself." drawn, Mrs. Haughton exclaimed him the next morning.

nearly ran over me, Lionel, and dear father."

"Oh, that is the person !- I supposed so," cried Lionel, kissing his Mrs. Haughton pouted, but kept mother, who was inclined to burst into tears. "I can explain it all now. Colonel Morley. Anyone who says a kind word about my father. warms my mother's heart to him at once-is it not so, mother dear?" "And long be it so," said Colonel Morley, with grateful earnestness; "and may such be my passport to "You don't know his name, yet your confidence, Mrs. Haughton, in the sixth form; and, pardon me, when I add, that if that gentleman were ever Charles Haughton's particular friend, he could scarcely have "Immense temptations-that is been a very wise one. For, unless his appearance greatly belie his years, he must have been little more than a boy when Charles Haughton

Here, in the delicacy of tact, seeing that Mrs. Haughton looked ashamed of the subject, and seemed aware of her imprudence, the Colonel rose, with a request-cheerfully granted-that Lionel might be When the footman had with- allowed to come to breakfast with

CHAPTER XI.

A man of the world, having accepted a troublesome charge, considers "what he will do with it;" and, having promptly decided, is sure, first, that he could not have done better; and, secondly, that much may be said to prove that he could not have done worse.

RESERVING to a later occasion any more detailed description of Colonel Morley, it suffices for the present to say that he was a man of a very fine understanding, as applied to the special world in which he lived. Though no one had a more numerous circle of friends, and though with many of those friends he was on that footing of familiar intimacy which Darrell's active career once, and his rigid seclusion of late, could not have established with any idle denizen of that brilliant society in which Colonel Morley moved and had his being, yet to Alban Morley's heart (a heart not easily reached) no friend was so dear as Guy Darrell, They had entered Eton on the same day-left it the same day-lodged while there in the same house; and though of very different characters. formed one of those strong, imperishable brotherly affections which the Fates weave into the very woof of existence.

Darrell's recommendation would have secured to any young protégé Colonel Morley's gracious welcome and invaluable advice. But, both as Darrell's acknowledged kinsman, and as Charles Haughton's son, Lionel called forth his kindliest sentiments, and obtained his most sagacious deliberations. He had already seen the boy several times, idea of sending him for three years before waiting on Mrs. Haughton. deeming it would please her to summed up his theories on the coldefer his visit until she could receive legiate ordeal in these succinct him in all the glories of Gloucester aphorisms: "Nothing so good as an Place; and he had taken Lionel University education, nor worse into high favour, and deemed him worthy of a conspicuous place in the world. Though Darrell in his letter to Colonel Morley had emphatically distinguished the position of Lionel. as a favoured kinsman, from that of a presumptive or even a probable heir, yet the rich man had also added: "But I wish him to take rank as the representative to the Haughtons; and whatever I may do with the bulk of my fortune, I shall insure to him a liberal independence. The completion of his education, the adequate allowance to him, the choice of a profession, are matters in which I entreat you to act for yourself, as if you were his guardian. I am leaving England-I may be abroad for years." Colonel Morley, in accepting the responsibilities thus pressed on him, brought to bear upon his charge subtle discrimination, as well as conscientious anxiety.

He saw that Lionel's heart was set upon the military profession, and that his power of application seemed lukewarm and desultory when not cheered and concentred by enthusiasm, and would, therefore, fail him if directed to studies which had no immediate reference to the objects of his ambition. The Colonel, accordingly, dismissed the to an University. Alban Morley education. Better throw a youth go to Paris-no better place to learn at once into the wider sphere of a military theories, and be civilised capital, provided you there secure out of huffy dispositions. No doubt to his social life the ordinary my old friend, the chevalier, who checks of good company, the re- has the art strategic at his fingerstraints imposed by the presence of ends, might be induced to take him decorous women, and men of grave en pension, direct his studies, and years and dignified repute;-than keep him out of harm's way. I can confine him to the exclusive society secure to him the entrée into the of youths of his own age-the age of circles of the rigid old Faubourg wild spirits and unreflecting imita- St. Germain, where manners are tion-unless he cling to the safeguard, which is found in hard respected. Besides, as I am so often reading, less by the book-knowledge it bestows, than by the serious and preoccupied mind which it abstracts there, spent in completing him as from the coarser temptations."

But Lionel, younger in character than in years, was too boyish as yet to be safely consigned to those trials of tact and temper which await the neophyte who enters on life through the doors of a mess-room. His pride was too morbid, too much on the alert for offence; his frankness too crude, his spirit too untamed by the insensible discipline of social commerce.

Quoth the observant Man of the World: "Place his honour in his own keeping, and he will carry it about with him on full cock, to blow off a friend's head or his own before the end of the first month. Huffy -decidedly huffy! and of all causes that disturb regiments, and induce courts - martial - the commonest cause is a huffy lad! Pity! for that youngster has in him the right metal-spirit and talent that should make him a first-rate soldier. It would be time well spent that should join professional studies with that degree of polite culture which to communicate the arrangement. gives dignity and cures huffiness. I backing a polite and well-worded must get him out of London, out of letter from the Colonel with his own England-cut him off from his more artless eloquence. Instantly mother's apron-strings, and the par- she flew off on the wing of her "little ticular friends of his poor father tempers." "What! her only son who prowl unannounced into the taken from her-sent to that horrid than an University without its | widow's drawing-room. He shall best bred, and household ties most at Paris myself, I shall have him under my eye, and a few years man, may bring him nearer to that marshal's baton which every recruit should have in his eye, than if I started him at once a raw boy. unable to take care of himself as an ensign, and unfitted, save by mechanical routine, to take care of others, should he live to buy the grade of a colonel." The plans thus promptly formed, Alban Morley briefly explained to Lionel, when the boy came to breakfast in Curzon Street; requesting him to obtain Mrs. Haughton's acquiescence in that exercise of the discretionary powers with which he had been invested by Mr. Darrell. To Lionel, the proposition that commended the very studies to which his tastes directed his ambition, and placed his initiation into responsible manhood among scenes bright to his fancy, because new to his experience, seemed of course the perfection of wisdom.

Less readily pleased was poor Mrs. Haughton, when her son returned Continent, just when she was so evening mother and son spent torespectably settled! What was the gether, though painful at the mogood of money if she was to be parted ment, it would be happiness for both from her boy! Mr. Darrell might hereafter to recall! Their hands take the money back if he pleasedshe would write and tell him so. Colonel Morley had no feeling: and she was shocked to think Lionel was in such unnatural hands. She saw very plainly that he no longer cared for her-a serpent's tooth, &c. &c. But as soon as the burst was over, the sky cleared, and Mrs. Haughton became penitent and sensible. Then her grief for Lionel's loss was diverted threshold of home-lost in the dimby preparations for his departure, ness of the far-opposing shore !-There was his wardrobe to see to-a bridge over which goes the boy patent portmanteau to purchase who will never return but as the and to fill. And, all done, the last man.

clasped in each other - her head leaning on his young shoulder-her tears kissed so soothingly away. And soft words of kindly motherly counsel, sweet promises of filial performance. Happy, thrice happy, as an after remembrance, be the final parting between hopeful son and fearful parent, at the foot of that mystic bridge, which starts from the tlemen whom Dolly Poole had contributed to his exchequer. Poole himself is beset by dnns, and pathethree stone in weight, and that he believes the calves to his legs are gone to enlarge his liver."

CHAPTER XII.

The Pocket-Cannibal baits his woman's trap with love-letters-And a Widow allured steals timidly towards it from under the weeds.

Jasper is compelled to put down his cabriolet-to discharge his groom lodgings; and just when the prospect even of a dinner becomes dim, he bethinks himself of Arabella Crane, like the prodigal son. Nay, to his ungallantly sconted, and from which

JASPER LOSELY is beginning to be own surprise, he finds Mrs. Crane hard up ! The infallible calculation has made her house much more at rouge-et-noir has carried off all inviting - the drawing - rooms are that capital which had accumulated cleaned up; the addition of a few from the savings of the young gen- easy articles of furniture gives them quite a comfortable air. She herself has improved in costume-though her favourite colour still remains tically observes "that he has lost iron-grey. She informs Jasper that she fully expected him-that these preparations are in his honour-that she has engaged a very good cookthat she hopes he will dine with her when not better engaged-in short, -to retire from his fashionable lets him feel himself at home in Podden Place. Jasper at first suspected a sinister design, under civilities that his conand remembers that she promised science told him were numerited-a him £5, nay £10, which are still due design to entrap him into that mafrom her. He calls-he is received trimonial alliance which he had so for any connubial partner less preternaturally terrific than the Witch of Endor or the Bleeding Nun!

But Mrs. Crane quickly and candidly hastened to dispel his ungenerous apprehensions. "She had given up," she said, "all ideas so preposterous-love and wedlock were equally out of her mind. But ill as he had behaved to her, she could not hut feel a sincere regard for him-a deep interest in his fate. He ought still to make a brilliant marriagedid that idea not occur to him? She might belp him there with her woman's wit. In short," said Mrs. Crane, pinching her lips; "In short, Jasper. I feel for you as a mother. Look on me as such !"

That pure and affectionate notion wonderfully tickled and egregiously delighted Jasper Losely. "Look on you as a mother ! I will," said he, with emphasis. "Best of creatures!" And though in his own mind he had not a doubt that she still adored him (not as a mother), he believed it was a disinterested, devoted adoration, such as the beautiful brute really had inspired more than once in his abominable life. Accordingly, he moved into the neighbourhood of Podden Place, contenting himself with a second-floor bedroom in a house recommended to him by Mrs. Crane, and taking his meals at his adopted mother's with filial familiarity. She expressed a desire to make Mr. Poole's acquaintance-Jasper hastened to present that worthy. Mrs. Crane invited Samuel Dolly to dine one day, to sup the next; she lent him £3 to redeem his dress-coat from pawn, and she gave him medicaments for the relief of his headache.

most superior woman—envied Jasper such a "mother." Thus easily longed pursuit of any object, however he still recoiled with an abhorrence | did Arabella Crane possess herself which Man is not justified in feeling of the existence of Jasper Losely. Lightly her fingers closed over itlightly as the fisherman's over the captivated trout. And whatever her generosity, it was not carried to imprudence. She just gave to Jasper enough to hring him within her power-she had no idea of ruining herself by larger supplies-she concealed from him the extent of her income (which was in ohief part derived from house rents), the amount of her savings, even the name of her banker. And if he carried off to the rouge-et-noir table the coins he obtained from her, and came for more, Mrs. Crane put on the look of a mother incensedmild hut awful-and scolded as mothers sometimes can scold. Jasper Losely began to be frightened at Mrs. Crane's scoldings. And he had not that power over her, which, though arrogated hy a lover, is denied to an adopted son. His mind. relieved from the habitual distraction of the gambling-table - for which the resource was wantingsettled with redoubled ardour on the image of Mrs. Haughton. He had called at her house several times since the fatal day on which he had met there Colonel Morley, but Mrs. Haughton was never at home. And as when the answer was given to him by the footman, he had more than once, on orossing the street, seen herself through the window. it was clear that his acquaintance was not courted. Jasper Losely, hy habit, was the reverse of a pertinacious and troublesome suitor-not. heaven knows, from want of audacity, hut from excess of self-love. Where a Lovelace so superh condescended to make overtures, a Clarissa so tasteless as to decline them de-Samuel Dolly venerated her as a served and experienced his conto the levity and fickleness of his had other motives than those on the surface for unusual perseverance.

A man like Jasper Losely never reposes implicit confidence in any one. He is garrulous, indiscreetlets out much that Machiavel would have advised him not to disclose: but he invariably has nooks and corners in his mind which he keeps to himself. Jasper did not confide to his adopted mother his designs upon his intended bride. But she knew them through Poole, to whom he was more frank; and when she saw him looking over her select and severe library - taking therefrom the Polite Letter-Writer and the Elegant Extracts, Mrs. Crane divined at once that Jasper Losely was meditating the effect of epistolary seduction upon the widow of Gloucester Place.

Jasper did not write a bad loveletter in the florid style. He had at his command, in especial, certain poetical quotations, the effect of which repeated experience had assured him to be as potent upon the female breast as the incantations or Carmina of the ancient sorcery. The following in particular :

" Had I a heart for falsehood framed, I ne'er could injure you."

Another-generally to be applied when confessing that his career had been interestingly wild, and would, if pity were denied him, be pathetically short:

"When he who adores thee has left but the name Of his faults and his follies behind,"

Armed with these quotationsmany a sentence from the Polite Letter-Writer or the Elegant Ex-important and attractive, was alien | paper, Losely sat down to Ovidisn composition. But as he approached temper. But in this instance he the close of Epistle the First, it occurred to him that a signature and address were necessary. The address not difficult. He could give Poole's (hence his confidence to that gentleman)-Poole had a lodging in Bury Street, St. James', a fashionable locality for single men. But the name required more consideration. There were insuperable objections against signing his own, to any person who might be in communication with Mr. Darrell-a pity, for there was a good old family of the name of Losely. A name of aristocratic sound might indeed be readily borrowed from any lordly proprietor thereof without asking a formal consent. But this loan was exposed to danger. Mrs. Haughton might very naturally mention such name, as borne by her husband's friend, to Colonel Morley, and Colonel Morley would most probably know enough of the connections and relations of any peer so honoured, to say "there is no such Greville, Cavendish, or Talbot." But Jasper Losely was not without fertility of invention and readiness of resource. A grand idea, worthy of a master, and proving that, if the man had not been a rogue in grain, he could have been reared into a very clever politician, flashed across him. He would sign himself "SMITH." Nobody could say there is no such Smith; nobody could say that a Smith might not be a most respectable, fashionable, highly-connected man. There are Smiths who are millionaires-Smiths who are large-acred squires-substantial baronets-peers of England, and pillars of the State. You can no more question a man's right to be a Smith than his right to be a Briton; and wide as the diversity of rank, lineage. tracts-and a quire of rose-edged virtue, and genius in Britons, is the name so generic often affects a definitive precursor. Jasper signed young officers had lounged to and himself " J. COURTENAY SMITH." He called, and left Epistle the

First with his own kid-gloved hand. inquiring first if Mrs. Haughton were at home, and, responded to in the negative this time, he asked for her son. "Her son was gone abroad with Colonel Morley," Jasper, though sorry to lose present hold over the boy, was consoled at learning that the Colonel was off the ground. More sanguine of success, he glanced up at the window, and, sure that Mrs. Haughton was there. though he saw her not, lifted his hat with as melancholy an expression of reproach as he could throw into his face.

The villain could not have found a moment in Mrs. Haughton's widowed life so propitious to his chance of success. In her lodginghouse at Pimlico, the good lady had been too incessantly occupied for that idle train of reverie, in which the poets assure us that Cupid finds leisure to whet his arrows, and take his aim. Had Lionel still been by her side-had even Colonel Morley been in town-her affection for the one, her awe of the other, would have been her safeguards. But alone in that fine new house-no friends, no acquaintances as yet-no dear visiting circle on which to expend the desire of talk and the zest for innocent excitement that are natural to ladies of an active mind and a nervous temperament, the sudden obtrusion of a suitor so respectfully ardent-oh, it is not to be denied that the temptation was IMMENSE!

And when that note, so neatly folded-so elegantly sealed-lay in still pretty; and her heart flew back his lamented friend. to the day when the linen-draper's In high glee Jasper showed Mrs.

diversity in Smiths. But still a fair daughter had been the cynosure of the provincial High Street-when fro the pavement, looking in at her window-when ogles and notes had alike beset her, and the dark eyes of the irresistible Charlie Haughton had first taught her pulse to tremble. And in her hand lies the letter of Charlie Haughton's particular friend. She breaks the seal. She reads-a declaration !

> Five letters in five days did Jasper write. In the course of those letters, he explains away the causes for suspicion which Colonel Morley had so ungenerously suggested. He is no longer anonymous-he is J. Courtenay Smith. He alludes incidentally to the precocious age in which he had become "lord of himself, that heritage of woe," This accounts for his friendship with a man so much his senior as the late Charlie. He confesses that, in the vortex of dissipation his hereditary estates have disappeared; but he has still a genteel independence; and with the woman of his heart, &c., &c. He had never before known what real love was &c. " Pleasure had fired his maddening soul;" "but the heart-the heart been lonely still." He entreated only a personal interview, even though to be rejectedscorned. Still, when "he who adored her had left but the name," &c., &c. Alas! alas! as Mrs. Haughton put down Epistle the Fifth, she hesitated: and the woman who hesitates in such a case, is sure, at least-to write a civil answer.

Mrs. Haughton wrote but three lines-still they were civil-and conceded an interview for the next day, though implying that it was but for the purpose of assuring Mr. J. her irresolute hand, the widow could Courtenay Smith in person, of her not but feel that she was still young. unalterable fidelity to the shade of Haughton's answer to Dolly Poole, | for a couple of sovereigns. He was and began seriously to speculate on sure that he should be in luck that the probable amount of the widow's night. She gave to him the sum, income, and the value of her mova- and spared the scoldings. But, as bles in Gloucester Place. Thence soon as he was gone, conjecturing he repaired to Mrs. Crane; and, from the bravado of his manner emboldened by the hope, for ever, what had really occurred, Mrs.

to escape from her maternal tute- Crane put on her bonnet and went lage, braved her scoldings, and asked out.

CHAPTER XIII.

Unhappy is the mau who puts his trust in-a woman,

LATE that evening a lady, in a black | ceived such a slap on its face. He veil, knocked at No.  Gloucester was literally stunned. Mechani-Place, and asked to see Mrs. Haugh- cally he hastened to Arabella Crane : ton on urgent business. She was and having no longer any object in admitted. She remained but five concealment, but, on the contrary, minutes.

bridegroom prancing to his bride," Jasper Losely presented himself at the widow's door, the servant placed in his hand a packet, and informed him bluffly that Mrs. Haughton had gone out of town. Jasper with diffi- with an easy chair and complimenculty suppressed his rage opened the tary converse, that, when Jasper packet-his own letters returned, rose late to return to his lodging, he with these words,-"Sir, your name said: "After all, if I had been ugly is not Courtenay Smith. If you and stupid, and of a weakly constitrouble me again, I shall apply to tution, I should have been of a very the police." Never from female domestio turn of mind," hand had Jasper Losely's pride rea most urgent craving for sympathy, The next day, when, "gay as a he poured forth his indignation and wrongs. No mother could be more consolatory than Mrs. Crane. She soothed, she flattered, she gave him an excellent dinner: after which, she made him so comfortable-what

CHAPTER XIV.

No author ever drew a character, consistent to human nature, but what he was forced to ascribe to it many inconsistencies.

speech of Jasper's, or by some other impulse not less feminine, Arabella Crane seemed suddenly to conceive the laudable and arduous design of reforming that portentous sinner. She had some distant relations in London, whom she very rarely troubled with a visit, and who, had she wanted anything from them. would have shut their doors in her face; but as, on the contrary, she was well off, single, and might leave her money to whom she pleased, the distant relations were always warm in manner, and prodigal in day she repaired to one of these kinsfolk-a person in a large way of business-and returned home with two great books in white sheepskin. And when Losely looked in to dine. she said, in the suavest tones a tender mother can address to an amiable truant, "Jasper, you have great abilities :- at the gaming-table abilities are evidently useless-your forte is calculation—you were always very quick at that. I have been easy piece of task-work, for which you will be liberally remunerated. A friend of mine wishes to submit these books to a regular accountant: he suspects that a clerk has cheated him, but he cannot tell how or where. You know accounts thoroughly - no one better - and the pay will be ten guineas."

the science of book-keeping and perfidious as that sleek tiger before

WHETHER moved by that pathetic | double-entry, made a grimace at the revolting idea of any honest labour. however light and well paid. But ten guineas were an immense temptation, and in the evening Mrs. Crane coaxed him into the task.

Neglecting no feminine art to make the lawless nomad feel at home under her roof, she had provided for his ease and comfort morocco slippers and a superb dressing-robe, in material rich, in colour becoming. Men, single or marital, are accustomed to connect the idea of home with dressing-gown and slippers, especially if, after their offers of service. The next dinner, they apply (as Jasper Losely now applied) to occupations in which the brain is active, the form in repose. What achievement literary or scientific, was ever accomplished by a student strapped to unvielding boots, and "cabined, cribbed, confined," in a coat that fits him like wax? As robed in the cozy garment which is consecrated to the sacred familiar Lares, the relaxing, handsome ruffian sate in the quiet room, bending his still regular fortunate enough to procure you an profile over the sheepskin booksthe harmless pen in that strong well - shaped hand, Mrs. Crane watched him with a softening countenance. To bear him company, she had actively taken, herself, to work - the gold thimble dragged from its long reposemarking and hemming, with nimble artistic fingers, new cravats Jasper, though his early life had for the adopted son! Strange crearendered familiar and facile to him ture is woman! Ungrateful and her had often proved himself- | Jasper Losely returns not, neither though no man could less deserve one kindly sentiment in a female heart-though she knew that he cared nothing for her, still it was pleasing to know that he cared for nobody else-that he was sitting in the same room-and Arabella Crane felt, that if that existence could continue she could forget the past, and look contented towards the future. Again I say, strange creature is woman-and in this instance, creature more strange, because so grim! But as her eyes soften, and her fingers work, and her mind revolves schemes for making that lawless wild beast an innocuous tame animal, who can help feeling for and with grim Arabella Crane?

experiment succeed? Three evenings does Jasper Losely devote to servant, Bridgett Greggs, who was this sinless life and its peaceful oo- perhaps the sole person in the world cupation. He completes his taskhe receives the ten guineas. (How much of that fee came out of Mrs. Crane's privy purse?) He detects three mistakes, which justify suspicion of the book-keeper's integrity. Set a thief to catch a thief! He is praised for acuteness, and promised a still lighter employment, to be still better paid. He departs, declaring that he will come the next day, earlier than usual-he volunteers an eulogium upon work in general-he vows that evenings so happy he has not spent for years: he leaves Mrs. Crane so much impressed by the hope of his improvement, that if a good clergyman had found her just at that moment, she might almost have been induced to pray. But-to Podden Place nor to his lodging in the neighbourhood. Days elapse: still he comes not; even Poole does not know where he has gone; even Poole has not seen him! But that latter worthy is now laid up with a serious rheumatic fever-confined to his room and water gruel. And Jasper Losely is not the man to intrude himself on the privacy of a sick-chamber. Mrs. Crane, more benevolent, visits Poole-cheers him np-gets him a nurse-writes to Uncle Sam. Poole blesses her. He hopes that Uncle Sam, moved by the spectacle of his sick-bed, will say, "Don't let your debts fret you -I will pay them !" Whatever her disappointment or resentment at Jasper's thankless and mysterious Poor woman! And will not the evasion, Arabella Crane is calmly confident of his return. To her who entertained affection for the lone gaunt woman, and who held Jasper Losely in profound detestation, she said, with tranquil sternness, "That man has crossed my life, and darkened it. He passed away, and left Night behind him. He has dared to return. He shall never escape me again, till the grave yawn for one of us."

"Hen quoties fidem Mutatosque deos flebit!"

"But, Lor love you, Miss, you would not put yourself in tho power of such a black-hearted vil-ling?"

"In his power! No. Bridgett: fear not, he must be in minesooner or later in mine-hand and foot. Patience!"

As she was thus speaking - a knock at the door-" It is he-I told you so-quick!"

But it was not Jasper Losely. It. was Mr. Rugge.

CHAPTER XV.

"When God wills, all winds bring rain,"-Ancient Proverb.

the loss of his property in Sophy the itinerant manager. Nor, though and £100, without taking much she had so mortally injured the forvain trouble to recover the one or lorn cripple in the eyes of Mr. the other. He had visited Jasper Hartopp, had she any deliberate while that gentleman lodged in St. purpose of revenge to gratify against James's, but the moment he hinted him! On the contrary, if she viewed at the return of the £100, Mr. him with contempt, it was a con-Losely opened both door and win- tempt not unmixed with pity. It dow, and requested the manager to was necessary to make to the Mayor make his immediate choice of the the communications she had made, two. Taking the more usual mode or that worthy magistrate would not of exit, Mr. Rugge vented his just have surrendered the child intrusted indignation in a lawyer's letter, to him, at least until Waife's return. threatening Mr. Losely with an And really it was a kindness to the action for conspiracy and fraud, old man to save him both from an He had also more than once visited agonising scene with Jasper, and Mrs. Crane, who somewhat soothed from the more public opprobrium him by allowing that he had been which any resistance on his part to very badly used, that he ought at Jasper's authority, or any altercation least to be repaid his money, and between the two, would occasion, promising to do her best to persuade And as her main object then was to Mr. Losely to "behave like a gen- secure Losely's allegiance to her, by tleman." With regard to Sophy proving her power to be useful to herself, Mrs. Crane appeared to feel him, so Waifes, and Sophys, and a profound indifference. In fact, Mayors, and Managers, were to her the hatred which Mrs. Crane had but as pawns to be moved and unquestionably conceived for Sophy sacrificed, according to the leading while under her charge, was much strategy of her game. diminished by Losely's unnatural conduct towards the child. To her breathless, to inform Mrs. Crane it was probably a matter of no in- that Waife had been seen in Longrades of the social ladder.

Sophy - Rugge and Waife - her claim on Mr. Waife." preference to Waife. He was on a with that ravishing marauder," said

THE Manager had not submitted to still lower step of the ladder than Rugge came now, agitated and terest whether Sophy was in Rugge's don. Mr. Rugge's clown had seen hands or Waife's; enough for her him, not far from the Tower; but that the daughter of a woman the cripple had disappeared before against whose memory her fiercest the clown, who was on the top of passions were enlisted was, in either an omnibus, had time to descend. case, so far below herself in the "And even if he had actually caught hold of Mr. Waife," observed Mrs. Perhaps of the two protectors for Crane, "what then? You have no spite alone would have given the "Bnt the Phenomenon must be

"However, I have set a rather, send him to me; we will minister of justice—that is, ma'am, a detective police-at work: and what I now ask of you is simply this: should it be necessary for Mr. Losely to appear with me before the senate—that is to say, ma'am, a metropolitan police-court-in order to prove my legal property in my own bought and paid-for Phenomenon. will you induce that bold had man not again to return the poisoned chalice to my lips?"

"I do not even know where Mr. Losely is-perhaps not in London." " Ma'am, I saw him last night at the theatre-Princess's. I was in the shilling gallery. He who owes me £100, ma'am-he in a private box!"

"Ah! you are sure; by him-

"With a lady, ma'am-a lady in a shawl from Ingee. I know them shawls. My father taught me to know them in early childhood. for he was an ornament to British commerce-a broker, ma'am-pawn! And," continued Rugge, with a withering smile, "that man in a private hox, which at the Princess's costs two pounds two, and with the spoils of Ingee by his side, lifted his eye-glass and beheld me-me in the shilling gallery !- and his conscience did not say 'should we not change places if I paid that gentleman £100?' Can such things be, and overcome us, ma'am, like a summer cloud, without our special-I put it to you, ma'am-wonder?"

"Oh, with a lady, was he?" exclaimed Arabella Crane-her wrath. which, while the manager spoke, gathered fast and full, bursting now into words: "His ladies shall know the man who sells his own child for first discover Mr. Losely's address. I will pay all the expenses. Rely on my zeal, Mr. Rugge." I

Much comforted, the manager went his way. He had not been long gone before Jasper himself appeared. The traitor entered with a more than customary bravado of manner, as if he apprehended a scolding, and was prepared to face it; but Mrs. Crane neither reproached him for his prolonged absence, nor expressed surprise at his return. With true feminine duplicity, she received him as if nothing had happened. thus relieved, became of his own accord apologetic and explanatory : evidently he wanted something of Mrs. Crane. "The fact is, my dear friend," said he, sinking into a chair, "that the day after I last saw you. I happened to go to the General Post-Office to see if there were any letters for me. You smile-you don't believe me. Honour bright - here they are." and Jasper took from the side pocket of his coat a pocketbook-a new pocket-book-a brilliant pocket-book - fragrant Russian leather-delicately embossedgolden clasps - silken linings iewelled pencil-case-malachite penknife - an arsenal of nicknacks stored in neat recesses; such a pocket-book as no man ever gives to himself. Sardanapalus would not have given that pocket-book to himself! Such a pocket-book never comes to you, oh enviable Lotharios. save as tributary keepsakes from the charmers who adore you! Grimly the Adopted Mother eyed that pocket-book. Never had she seen it before. Grimly she pinched her lips. Out of this dainty volumea show; only find out where the which would have been of cumbrous girl is, then come here again before size to a slim thread-paper exquisite, you stir further. Oh, with a lady! but scarcely bulged into ripple the Go to your detective policeman, or Atlantic expanse of Jasper Losely's magnificent ohest-the monster drew | forth two letters on French paperforeign post-marks. He replaced them quickly, only suffering her eye to glance at the address, and continued: "Fancy! that purse-proud would not believe me, has been to France-yes, actually to * * * * making inquiries evidently with reference to Sophy. The woman who onght to have thoroughly converted him took flight, however, and missed seeing him. Confound her! I ought to have been there. So I have no doubt for the present the Pagan remains stubborn. Gone on into Italy, I hear; doing me, violating the laws of nature, and roving about the world, with his own solitary hands in his bottomless pockets, -like the Wandering Jew! But. as some slight set-off in my run of ill-luck, I find at the post-office a pleasanter letter than the one which brings me this news: A rich elderly lady, who has no family, wants to adopt a nice child, will take Sophy: make it worth my while to let her have Sophy. 'Tis convenient in a thousand ways to settle one's child comfortably in a rich house-establishes rights, subject, of course, to cheques which would not affront me -a Father! But the first thing requisite is to catch Sophy; 'tis in that I ask your help-you are so clever. Best of creatures! what could I do without you? As you say, whenever I want a friend I come to you-Bella !"

Mrs. Crane surveyed Jasper's face deliberately. It is strange how much more readily women read the thoughts of men than men detect those of women. "You know where the child is," said she, slowly,

"Well, I take it for granted she is with the old man; and I have wanted to get back the child; you seen him-seen him vesterday."

"Go on; you saw him-where?

" Near London Bridge."

"What business could you possibly have in that direction! Ah! I guess, the railway station-to Dover-you are going abroad?"

"No such thing-you are so Grand Turk of an infidel, though he horribly suspicious. But it is true I had been to the station inquiring after some luggage or parcels which a friend of mine had ordered to be left there-now, don't interrupt me. At the foot of the bridge I caught a sudden glimpse of the old manchanged-altered-aged-one eye lost. You had said I should not know him again, but I did; I should never have recognised his face. I knew him by the build of the shoulder-a certain turn of the arms -I don't know what; one knows a man familiar to one from birth without seeing his face. Oh, Bella! I declare that I felt as soft-as soft as the silliest muff who ever-" Jasper did not complete his comparison. but paused a moment, breathing hard, and then broke into another sentence. "He was selling something in a basket-matches, bootstraps, deuce knows what. He! a clever man, too! I should have liked to drop into that d-d basket all the money I had about me."

"Why did not you?"

"Why? How could I? He would have recognised me. There would have been a scene-a row-a flare-up-a mob round us. I dare say. I had no idea it would so upset me; to see him selling matches, too :- glad we did not meet at Gatesboro'. Not even for that £100 do I think I could have faced him. No -as he said when we last parted, 'The world is wide enough for both. Give me some brandy-thank you."

"You did not speak to the old man-he did not see you-but you felt sure she must be with him : you followed him home?"

that old man."

child-his sole comfort?"

"Bother!" cried Losely, impatiently: "the child can be only a Jasper?" burthen to him; well out of his! down; without her he'd find a way will call here in the evening." to shift for himself. Why, he's even cleverer than I am! And there- abroad at once to this worthy lady there - give him this money, but who will adopt her? If so, we shall don't say it came from me."

several sovereigns-at least twelve or still." fourteen-into Mrs. Crane's palm; human pity in Jasper Losely's be- elderly." nighted soul, shed its relenting influence over the angry, wrathful, forget. I am as your mother. One and vindictive feelings with which of your letters, then, announced this Mrs. Crane the moment before re- lady's intended arrival; you were in garded the perfidious miscreant; correspondence with this-elderly and she gazed at him with a sort of lady ?" melancholy wonder. What! though so little sympathising with affection, dence. But when I left Paris I that he could not comprehend that gave the General Post-Office as my he was about to rob the old man of address to a few friends in France. a comfort which no gold could re- And this lady, who took an interest pay-what! though so contemp- in my affairs (ladies, whether old or tuously callous to his own child- young, who have once known me, yet there in her hand lay the un- always do), was aware that I had

"I? No; I should have had to mistakable token that a something wait for hours. A man like me, of humanity, compunction, comloitering about London Bridgo !- passion, still lingered in the breast I should have been too conspicuous of the greedy cynio; and at that -he would have soon caught sight thought all that was softest in her of me, though I kept on his blind own human nature moved towards side. I employed a ragged boy to him-indulgent-gentle. But in the watch and follow him, and here is rapid changes of the heart feminine, the address. Now, will you get the very sentiment that touched Sophy back for me without any upon love brought back the jealousy trouble to me, without my appear- that bordered upon hate. How ing? I would rather charge a regi- came he by so much money? more ment of horse-guards than bully than, days ago, he, the insatiate spendthrift, had received for his "Yet you would rob him of the task-work? And that POCKET-Book!

"You have suddenly grown rich,

For a moment he looked confused. way; 'tis for the sake of that child but replied as he re-helped himself he is selling matches! It would be to the brandy, "Yes, rouge-et-noir the greatest charity we could do -luck. Now, do go and see after him to set him free from that child this affair, that's a dear good woman. sponging on him, dragging him Get the child to-day if you can; I

"Should you take her, then, meet, I suppose, no more; and I am He thrust, without counting, assisting you to forget that I live "Abroad-that orotchet of yours and so powerful a charm has good- again. You are quite mistaken-in ness the very least, even in natures fact, the lady is in London. It was the most evil, that that unusual, for her effects that I went to the eccentric, inconsistent gleam of station. Oh, don't be jealous-quite

"Jealous, my dear Jasper; you

"Why, not exactly in correspon-expectations with respect to the child. So, some days ago, when I Jasper, standing by the window, saw was so badly off. I wrote a line to Mrs. Crane leave the house, walking tell her that Sophy had been no go, briskly. He then threw himself on and that, but for a dear friend (that the sofa, and began to doze: the doze is you). I might be on the pare. In deepened, and became sleep. Bridher answer, she said she should be in London as soon as I received her letter; and gave me an address here at which to learn where to find her when arrived-a good old soul, but strange to London. I have been very busy, helping her to find a house, recommending tradesmen. and so forth. She likes style, and can afford it. A pleasant house enough; but our quiet evenings here spoil me for anything else. Now get on your bonnet, and let me see you off."

"On one condition, my dear Jasper, that you stay here till I return."

Jasper made a wry face. But, as it was near dinner time, and he never wanted for appetite, he at length agreed to employ the interval of her absence in discussing a meal, which experience had told him Mrs. Crane's new cook would, not unskilfully, though hastily, prepare. Mrs. Crane left him to order the dinner, and put on her shawl and bonnet. But, gaining her own room, she rung for Bridgett Greggs, and when that confidential servant appeared, she said: "In the side-pocket of Mr. Losely's coat there is a POCKET- if in self-commune. Then noise-BOOK; in it there are some letters lessly she glided down the stairs. which I must see. I shall appear regained the street, and hurried fast to go ont, - leave the street-door upon her way. aiar, that I may slip in again unobserved. You will serve dinner as the book to Jasper's pocket, for soon as possible. And when Mr. when she re-entered he was turning Losely, as usual, exchanges his coat round and stretching himself befor the dressing-gown, contrive to tween sleep and waking. But she take out that pocket-book unob- dropped the book skilfully on the served by him. Bring it to me here, floor, close beside the sofa: it would in this room; you can as easily re- seem to him, on waking to have place it afterwards. A moment will fallen out of the pocket in the natusuffice to my purpose."

Bridgett nodded, and understood. gett, entering to lay the cloth, so found him. She approached on tiptoe-sniffed the perfume of the pocket-book-saw its gilded corners peep forth from its lair. She hesitated-she trembled-she was in mortal fear of that truoulent slumberer: but sleep lessens the awe thieves feel, or heroes inspire. She has taken the pocket-book-she has fled with the booty-she is in Mrs. Crane's apartment not five minutes after Mrs. Crane has regained its threshold.

Rapidly the jealous woman ransacked the pocket-book-started to see, elegantly worked with gold threads, in the lining, the words, "SOUVIENS-TOI DE TA GABRIELLE" -no other letters, save the two, of which Jasper had vouchsafed to her but the glimpse. Over these she hurried her glittering eyes; and when she restored them to their place, and gave back the book to Bridgett, who stood by breathless and listening, lest Jasper should awake, her face was colourless, and a kind of shudder seemed to come over her. Left alone, she rested her face on her hand, her lips moving as Bridgett was not in time to restore ral movements of sleep.

And, in fact, when he rose, dinner | brother-in-law, Simpson, wished to now on the table, he picked up the pocket-book without suspicion. But it was lucky that Bridgett had not waited for the opportunity suggested by her mistress. For when Jasper put on the dressing-gown, he observed that his coat wanted brushing; and, in giving it to the servant for that purpose, he used the precaution of taking out the pocketbook, and placing it in some other receptacle of his dress.

Mrs. Crane returned in less than two hours-returned with a disanpointed look, which at once prepared Jasper for the intelligence that the birds to be entrapped had flown.

"They went away this afternoon." said Mrs. Crane, tossing Jasper's sovereigns on the table as if they burned her fingers. "But leave the fugitives to me. I will find them."

Jasper-relieved his angry mind by a series of guilty but meaningless expletives; and then, seeing no farther use to which Mrs. Crane's wits could be applied at present, finished the remainder of her brandy, and wished her good-night, with a promise to call again, but without any intimation of his own address. As soon as he was gone, Mrs. Crane once more summoned Bridgett. "You told me last week that your on Thursday."

go to America, that he had the offer of employment there, but that he could not afford the fare of the voyage. I promised I would help him if it was a service to you."

"You are a hangel, Miss!" exclaimed Bridgett, dropping a low curtsy-so low that it seemed as if she was going on her knees. " And may you have your deserts in the next blessed world, where there are no black-hearted villings."

"Enough, enough," said Mrs. Crane, recoiling perhaps from that grateful benediction. "You have been faithful to me, as none else have ever been : but this time I do not serve you in return so much as I meant to do. The service is reciprocal, if your brother-in-law will do me a favour. He takes with him his daughter, a mere child. Bridgett, let them enter their names on the steam-vessel as William and Sophy Waife: they can, of course, resume their own name when the voyage is over. There is the fare for them, and something more. Pooh, no thanks. I can spare the money. See your brother-in-law the first thing in the morning; and remember they go by the next vessel, which sails from Liverpool

CHAPTER XVI.

Those poor Pocket-Cannibals, how Society does persecute them! Even a menial servant would give warning if disturbed at his meals. But your Man-eater is the meekest of creatures; he will never give warning, and-not often take it,

WHATEVER the source that had sup- | console Waife for the loss of Sophy, plied Jasper Losely with the money, that source either dried up, or befrom which he had so generously came wholly inadequate to his wants, extracted the sovereigns intended to For elasticity was the felicitous peculiarity of Mr. Losely's wants. They accommodated themselves to the state of his finances with mathematical precision, always requiring exactly five times the amount of the means placed at his disposal. From a shilling to a million, multiply his wants by five times the total of his means, and you arrived at a just conclusion. Jasper called npon Poole. who was slowly recovering, but unable to leave his room; and finding that gentleman in a more melancholy state of mind than usual. occasioned by Uncle Sam's brutal declaration, that "if responsible for his godson's sins, he was not responsible for his debts," and that he really thought "the best thing Samuel Dolly could do, was to go to prison for a short time, and get whitewashed," Jasper began to lament his own hard fate: "And just when one of the finest women in Paris has come here on purpose to see me," said the lady-killer,-"a lady who keeps her carriage, Dolly! Would have introduced you, if you had been well enough to go out. One can't be always borrowing of her. I wish one could. There's Mother Crane, would sell her gown off her back for me; but 'Gad, sir, she snubs, and positively frightens me. Besides, she lays traps to demean meset me to work like a clerk !-not that I would hurt your feelings, Dolly,-if you are a clerk, or something of that sort, you are a gentleman at heart. Well, then, we are both done up and cleaned out; and my decided opinion is, that nothing is left but a bold stroke."

"I have no objection to bold strokes, but I don't see any; and Uncle Sam's bold stroke of the Fleet prison is not at all to my taste."

"Fleet prison! Fleet fiddlestick! No. You have never been in Russia? Why should we not go there both? is good paper. We can sign good

My Paris friend, Madame Caumartin, was going to Italy, but her plans are changed, and she is now all for St. Petersburg. She will wait a few days for you to get well. We will all go together and enjoy ourselves. The Russians doat noon whist. We shall get into their swell sets and live like princes." Therewith Jasperlaunched forth on the text of Russian existence in such glowing terms that Dolly Poole shut his aching eyes and fancied himself sledging down the Neva covered with furs-a Countess waiting for him at dinner, and Counts in dozens ready to offer bets to a fabulous amount, that Jasper Losely lost the rubber.

Having lifted his friend into this region of aerial castles. Jasper then, descending into the practical world, wound up with the mournful fact, that one could not get to St. Petersburg, nor, when there, into swell sets, without having some little capital on hand.

"I tell you what we will do. Madame Caumartin lives in prime style. Get old Latham, your employer, to discount her bill at three months' date for £500, and we will be all off in a crack." Poole shook his head, "Old Latham is too knowing a file for that.-A foreigner! He'd want security."

" I'll be security."

Dolly shook his head a second time, still more emphatically than the first.

"But you say he does discount paper-gets rich on it?"

"Yes, gets rich on it, which he might not do if he discounted the paper you propose.

offence." "Oh, no offence among friends! You have taken him bills which he has discounted?" "Yes-good paper."

"Any paper signed by good names ings,"

Dolly started, and turned white. Knave he was-cheat at cards, blackleg on the turf-but forgery! that crime was new to him. The very notion of it brought on a return of fever. And while Jasper was increasing his malady by arguing with his apprehensions, luckily for Poole, Uncle Sam came in. Uncle Sam, a sagacious old tradesman, no sooner clapped eyes on the brilliant Losely than he conceived for him a distrustful repugnance, similar to that with which an experienced gander may regard a fox in colloquy with its gosling. He had already learned enough of his godson's ways, and chosen society, to be assured that Samuel Dolly had indulged in very anti-commercial tastes, and been sadly contaminated by very anticommercial friends. He felt persuaded that Dolly's sole chance of redemption was in working on his mind while his body was still suffering, so that Poole might, on recovery, break with all former associations. On seeing Jasper in the dress of an exquisite, with the thews of a prize-fighter. Uncle Sam saw the stalwart incarnation of all the sins which a godfather had vowed that a godson should renounce. Accordingly, he made himself so disagreeable, that Losely, in great disgust, took a hasty departure. And Uncle Sam, as he helped the nurse to plunge Dolly into his bed, had the brutality to tell his nephew, in very plain terms, that if ever he found that Brummagem gent in Poole's rooms again, Poole would never again see the colour of Uncle Sam's money. Dolly beginning to blubber, the good man relenting, patted him on the back, and said: "But as soon as you names if we know their handwrit- | who will comb your head for you." -at which cheering prospect Poole blubbered more dolefully than before. On retiring to his own lodging in the Gloucester Coffee-house. Unde Sam, to make all sure, gave positive orders to Poole's landlady. who respected in Uncle Sam the man who might pay what Poole owed to her, on no account to let in any of Dolly's profligate friends, but especially the ohap he had found there: adding. "'Tisas much as my nephew's life is worth; and, what is more to the purpose, as much as your bill is." Accordingly, when Jasper presented himself at Poole's door again that very evening, the landlady apprised him of her orders; and proof to his insinuating remonstrances, closed the door in his face. But a French ohronicler has recorded, that when Henry IV. was besieging Paris, though not a loaf of bread could enter the walls, love-letters passed between city and camp as easily as if there had been no siege at all. And does not Mercury preside over money as well as Love? Jasper, spurred on by Madame Caumartin, who was exceedingly anxious to exchange London for St. Petersburg as soon as possible, maintained a close and frequent correspondence with Poole by the agency of the nurse, who luckily was not above being bribed by shillings. Poole continued to reject the villany proposed by Jasper; but, in course of the correspondence, he threw out rather incoherently-for his mind began somewhat to wander - a scheme equally flagitious, which Jasper, aided perhaps by Madame Caumartin's yet keener wit, caught up, and quickly reduced to deliberate method. Old Mr. Latham, amongst the bills he discounted, kept those of are well, I'll carry you with me to such more bashful customers as my country box, and keep you out stipulated that their resort to temof harm's way till I find you a wife, porary accommodation should be maintained a profound secret, in his | sharp as those in the maw of the fish own safe. Poole knew that there was one for dark emeralds, of which the pupils, £1,000 given by a young nobleman of immense estates, but so entailed was scheming, retreated upward tothat he could neither sell nor mortgage, and, therefore, often in need nous green ray that shot through of a few hundreds for pocket-money. The nobleman's name stood high, from a dark lanthorn; complexion His fortune was universally known: his honour unimpeachable. A bill pale but white, as if she lived on of his any one would cash at sight. blanched almonds, peach-stones, and Could Poole but obtain that bill! It had, he believed, only a few weeks yet to run. Jasper or Madame there seemed stings at their tips; Caumartin might get it discounted even by Lord ---'s own banker: ranks of society from highest to and if that were too bold, by any professional bill-broker, and all each of them. Did she please it, a three be off before a suspicion could crown prince might have thought arise. But to get at that safe, a false key might be necessary. Poole suggested a waxen impression of the lock. Jasper sent him a readier contrivance-a queer-looking tool, that looked an instrument of dering on forty. torture. All now necessary was for younger, but had she been a Poole to recover sufficiently to return to business, and to get rid of Uncle Sam by a promise to run down to the country the moment her youth from ever being fostered Poole had conscientiously cleared in elegant boudoirs by those bloodsome necessary arrears of work. While this correspondence went on, bond had borne her away from Jasper Losely shunned Mrs. Crane, and took his meals and spent his leisure hours with Madame Caumartin. He needed no dressinggown and slippers to feel himself at home there. Madame Caumartin had really taken a showy house in a genteel street. Her own appearance was eminently what the French call distinguée. Drest to perfection from head to foot; neat and finished as an epigram. Her face, in shape, like a thoroughbred cohra-capella,-low smooth frontal. widening at the summit; chin taper- that time once more into his power ing, but jaw strong, teeth marvel- was (whatever its nature) harmless

Amongst these bills called the "Sea Devil;" eyes like when she was angry or when she wards the temples, emitting a lumispace like the gleam that escapes superlatively feminine-call it not arsenic: hands so fine and so bloodless, with fingers so pointedly taper manners of one who had ranged all lowest, and duped the most wary in her youth must have passed in the chambers of porphyry! Did she please it, an old soldier would have sworn the creature had been a vivandière. In age, perhaps, bor-She looked hundred and twenty, she could not have been more wicked. Ah, happy indeed for Sophy, if it were to save less hands, that the crippled vaga-Arabella's less cruel unkindness; better far even Rugge's village stage; better far stealthy by-lanes, feigned names, and the erudite tricks of Sir Isaac!

But still it is due even to Jasper to state here, that in Losely's recent design to transfer Sophy from Waife's care to that of Madame Caumartin, the Sharper harboured no idea of a villany so execrable as the character of the Parisienne lead the jealous Arabella to suspect. His real object in getting the child at lously white, small, and with points | compared with the mildest of Arabella's dark doubts. But still if "And I thought I had him, till I Sophy had been regained, and the found Mr. Losely in his sick-room; object, on regaining her, foiled (as it but ever since that day, I don't probably would have been), what know how it is, the lad has had then might have become of her; - something on his mind, which I lost, perhaps, for ever, to Waife-in don't half like-cracky. I think my a foreign land-and under such dear lady-cracky. I suspect that guardianship? which Jasper Losely, who exercised so little foresight in the paramount question-viz. what some day or other would become of himself?was not likely to rack his brains by conjecturing!

Meanwhile Mrs. Crane was vigilant, The detective police-officer sent | then ? " to her by Mr. Rugge could not give may become a practical man. Remy dear lady."

Sam warmed in his confidence.

Grave question, old nurse passes letters. I taxed her with it, and she immediately wanted to take her Bible-oath, and smelt of gin-two things which, taken together, look guilty."

> "But," said Mrs. Crane, growing much interested, "if Mr. Losely and Mr. Poole do correspond, what

"That's what I want to know, her the information which Rugge ma'am. Excuse me; I don't wish desired, and which she did not to disparage Mr. Losely-a dashing longer need. She gave the detective gent, and nothing worse, I dare say. some information respecting Ma- But certain sure I am that he has dame Caumartin. One day towards put into Samuel Dolly's head somethe evening she was surprised by a thing which has cracked it! There visit from Uncle Sam. He called is the lad now up and dressed, when ostensibly to thank her for her he ought to be in bed, and swearing kindness to his godson and nephew: he'll go to old Latham's to-morrow. and to beg her not to be offended if and that long arrears of work are on he had been rude to Mr. Losely, his conscience! Never heard him who, he understood from Dolly, was talk of conscience before—that looks a particular friend of hers. "You guilty! And it does not frighten see, ma'am, Samnel Dolly is a weak him any longer when I say he shall young man, and easily led astray; go to prison for his debts; and he's but, luckily for himself, he has no very anxious to get me out of Lunmoney and no stomach. So he may non; and when I threw in a word repent in time; and if I could find about Mr. Losely (slyly, my good a wife to manage him, he has not a lady-just to see its effect), he grew bad head for the main chance, and as white as that paper; and then he began strutting and swelling, and peatedly I have told him he should saying that Mr. Losely would be a go to prison, but that was only to great man, and that he should be a frighten him,-fact is, I want to get great man, and that he did not care him safe down into the country, and for my money-he could get as he don't take to that. So I am much money as he liked. That forced to say, 'My box, home-brewed looks guilty, my dear lady. And and south-down, Samuel Dolly, or a oh," cried Uncle Sam, clasping his Lunnon jail, and debtors' allowance.' hands, "I do fear that he's thinking Must give a young man his choice, of something worse than he has ever done before, and his brain can't Mrs. Crane, observing that what stand it. And, ma'am, he has a he said was extremely sensible. Uncle great respect for you; and you've a friendship for Mr. Losely. Now.

spree, and my sister's son should, Where shall I find you afterbeing cracky, construe it into something criminal. Oh, Mrs. Crane, do go and see Mr. Losely, and tell him Oh, my dear lady, how can I thank that Samuel Dolly is not safe-is you enough! The boy can be not safe!"

just suppose that Mr. Losely should | your nephew." said Mrs. Crane: have been thinking of what your "and with your leave I will do so at flash sporting gents call a harmless once. Let me see him alone. wards?"

"At the Gloucester Coffee-house. nothing to you; but to me, he's my "Much better that I should go to sister's son-the blackguard!"

CHAPTER XVII.

es Dices laborantes in uno Penelopen vitreamque Circen."-HOBAT.

MRS. CRANE found Poole in his ing Poole less light-headed and more little sitting-room, hung round with prints of opera-dancers, prizefighters, race-horses, and the dog Billy. Samuel Dolly was in full dress. His cheeks, usually so pale, seemed much flushed. He was evidently in a state of high excitement. bowed extremely low to Mrs. Crane. called her Countess, asked if she had been lately on the Continent, and if she knew Madame Caumartin; and whether the nobility at St. Petersburg were jolly, or stuck-up fellows, who gave themselves airs ;- not waiting for her answer. In fact his mind was unquestionably disordered.

Arabella Crane abruptly laid her hand on his shoulder. "You are going to the gallows," she said, suddenly. "Down on your knees and tell me all, and I will keep your are lost!"

Poole burst into tears, and dropped on his knees as he was told.

light-hearted, she hastened to Uncle Sam at the Gloucester Coffee-house. "Take your nephew out of town this evening, and do not let him from your sight for the next six months. Hark you, he will never be a good man; but you may save him from the hulks. Do so. Take my advice." She was gone before Uncle Sam could answer.

She next proceeded to the private house of the detective with whom she had before conferred-this time less to give than to receive information. Not half an hour after her interview with him. Arabella Crane stood in the street wherein was placed the showy house of Madame Caumartin. The lamps in the street were now lighted-the street, even at day a quiet one, was comparatively deserted. All the windows in secret, and save you; lie-and you the Frenchwoman's house were closed with shutters and curtains, except on the drawing-room floor. From those the lights within In ten minutes Mrs. Crane knew streamed over a balcony filled with all that she cared to know, possessed gay plants-one of the casements herself of Losely's letters, and, leav- was partially open. And now and then, where the watcher stood, she | house); "or, if you do, share her could just catch the glimpse of a fate. I cast you off." passing form behind the muslin draperies, or hear the sound of some louder laugh. In her dark-grey dress, and still darker mantle, Arabella Crane stood motionless, her eves fixed on those windows. The rare foot-passenger who brushed by her turned involuntarily to glance at the countenance of one so still, and then as involuntarily to survey the house to which that countenance was lifted. No such observer so incurious as not to hazard conjecture what evil to that house was boded by the dark lurid eyes that watched it with so fixed a menace. Thus she remained, sometimes, indeed, moving from her post, as a sentry moves from his, slowly pacing a few steps to and fro, returning to the same place, and again motionless; thus she remained for hours. Evening deepened into night-night grew near to dawn; she was still there in that street, and still her eyes were on that house. At length the door opened noiselessly-a tall man tripped forth with a gay light step, and humming the tune of a gay French chanson. As he came straight towards the spot where Arabella Crane was at watch, from her dark mautle stretched forth her long arm and lean hand, and seized him. He started, and recognized her. "You here!" he exclaimed-" you !-at such an hour !-you !"

"I, Jasper Losely, here to warn retreated some steps towards the this the counsel of a jealous woman?

"What do you mean ?" said Jasper, halting, till with slow steps she regained his side. "Speak more plainly: if poor Madame Caumartin has got into a scrape, which I don't think likely, what have I to do with it?"

"The woman you call Caumartin fled from Paris to escape its tribunals. She has been tracked: the French government have claimed her-Ho!-you smile. This does not touch you?"

"Certainly not."

"But there are charges against her from English tradesmen; and if it be proved that you knew her in her proper name-the infamous Gabrielle Desmarets-if it be proved that you have passed off the French billets de banque that she stole-if you were her accomplice in obtaining goods under her false name-if you, enriched by her robberies, were aiding and abetting her as a swindler here, though you may be safe from the French law, will you be safe from the English? You may be innocent, Jasper Losely; if so, fear nothing. You may be guilty : if so, hide, or follow me!"

Jasper paused. His first impulse was to trust implicitly to Mrs. Crane, and lose not a moment in profiting by such counsels of concealment or flight as an intelligence so superior to his own could suggest. But suddenly remembering that Poole had undertaken to get the bill To-morrow the officers of for £1,000 by the next day-that if justice will be in that accursed flight were necessary, there was yet house. To-morrow that woman- a chance of flight with booty-his not for her worst crimes, they elude | constitutional hardihood, and the the law, but for her least, by which grasping cupidity by which it was the law hunts her down-will be accompanied, made him resolve at a prisoner-No-you shall not least to hazard the delay of a few return to warn her as I warn you" hours. And after all, might not (for Jasper here broke away, and Mrs. Crane exaggerate? Was not fixing quick keen eyes on her as Good-night, or rather good-mornshe walked by his side-" pray, ing." how did you learn all these particulars?" "From a detective policeman employed to discover Sophy. In conferring with him, the name of -last hope-last plank in a devour-Jasper Losely as her legal protector ing sea!"

was of course stated: that name was already coupled with the name of the false Caumartin. Thus, indi- of the reckless man. "I have no rectly, the child you would have consigned to that woman, saves you from sharing that woman's ignominy and doom."

"Stuff!" said Jasper stubbornly, though he winced at her words: "1 don't, on reflection, see that anything can be proved against me. I am not bound to know why a lady changes her name, nor how she comes by her money. And as to her credit with tradesmen-nothing to speak of: most of what she has got is paid for-what is not paid for, is less than the worth of her goods. Pooh! I am not so easily frightened gained her door, and was welcomed

"Pray," said he, moving on, and Go home now; 'tis horridly late.

"Jasper, mark me, if you see that woman again-if you attempt to save or screen her-I shall know. and you lose in me your last friend

These words were so solemnly uttered that they thrilled the heart wish to screen or save her," he said, with selfish sincerity. "And after what you have said, I would as soon enter a fireship as that house. But let me have some hours to consider what is best to be done." "Yes, consider-I shall expect you to-morrow." He went his way up the twilight streets towards a new lodging he had hired not far from the showy house. She drew her mantle closer round her gaunt figure, and, taking the opposite direction, threaded thoroughfares yet lonelier, till she -much obliged to you all the same. back by the faithful Bridgett.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Hope tells a flattering tale to Mr. Rugge. He is undeceived by a Solicitor; and left to mourn; but in turn, though unconsciously, Mr. Rugge deceives the Solicitor, and the Solicitor deceives his client, -which is 6s. 8d. in the Solicitor's pocket.

books, which confirmed the hateful Losely, conscience-stricken, might

THE next morning Arabella Crane | tidings. As if in mockery of his was scarcely dressed before Mr. bereaved and defrauded state, on Rugge knocked at her door. On returning home he found a polite the previous day the detective had note from Mr. Gotobed, requesting informed him that William and him to call at the office of that Sophy Waife were discovered to eminent solicitor, with reference to have sailed for America. Frantic a young actress named Sophy Waife, the unhappy manager hurried away and hinting "that the visit might to the steam-packet office, and was prove to his advantage!" Dreamfavoured by an inspection of the ing for a wild moment that Mr. through this solicitor pay back his Juliet Araminta, in my hands. You £100, he rushed incontinent to Mr. ask £100 to inform me where she is. Gotobed's office, and was at once Have you a lawful claim on her?" admitted into the presence of that stately practitioner. perty."

"I beg your pardon, sir," said Mr. Gotobed with formal politeness, "but I heard a day or two ago accidentally from my head-clerk, who had learned it also accidentally from a sporting friend, that you were exhibiting at Humberstone, during the race- rica! or on the seas to it." week, a young actress, named on the play-bills (here is one) 'Juliet Araminta,' and whom, as I am informed, you had previously exhibited in Surrey and elsewhere; but she was supposed to have relinquished that earlier engagement, and left your stage with her grandfather, William Waife, I am instructed by a distinguished client, who is wealthy, and who, from motives of mere benevolence, interests himself in the said William and Sonhy Waife, to discover their residence. Please, therefore, to render up the child to my charge, apprising me also of the address of her grandfather, if he be not with you: and without waiting for further instructions from my client, who is abroad. I will venture to say that any sacrifice in the loss of your juvenile actress will be most liberally compensated."

"Sir." cried the miserable and imprudent Rugge, "I paid £100 for that fiendish child-a three years' engagement-and I have been robbed. Restore me the £100, and I will tell you where she is, and her vile grandfather also."

At hearing so bad a character lavished upon objects recommended to his client's disinterested charity, the wary solicitor drew in his pecuniary horns.

"Mr. Rugge," said he, "I understand from your words that you cannot place the child Sophy, alias at length to Guy Darrell, informing "Certainly, sir; she is my pro-

"Then it is quite clear that though you may know where she is, you cannot get at her yourself, and cannot, therefore, place her in my hands. Perhaps she is-in heaven!"

"Confound her, sir! no-in Ame-

"Are you sure?"

"I have just come from the steampacket office, and seen the names in their book. William and Sophy Waife sailed from Liverpool last Thursday week."

"And they formed an engagement with you - received your money; broke the one, absconded with the other. Bad characters indeed!"

"Bad! you may well say that-a set of swindling scoundrels, the whole kit and kin. And the ingratitude!" continued Rugge: " I was more than a father to that child" (he began to whimper): "I had a babe of my own once-died of convulsions in teething. I thought that child would have supplied its place, and I dreamed of the York Theatre: but"-here his voice was lost in the folds of a marvellously dirty red pocket-handkerchief.

Mr. Gotobed having now, however, learned all that he cared to learn, and not being a soft-hearted man (first-rate solicitors rarely are), here pulled out his watch, and said-

"Sir, you have been very ill-treated. I perceive. I must wish you good-day; I have an engagement in the City. I cannot help you back to your £100, but accept this trifle (a £5 note) for your loss of time in calling" (ringing the bell violently). "Door-show out this gentleman."

That evening Mr. Gotobed wrote longed research, he had been so for- needing the most wary caution-the tunate as to ascertain that the most considerate patience—the most strolling player and little girl whom delicate touch, to arrange or re-Mr. Darrell had so benevolently adjust. Few of our errors, national requested him to look up, were very or individual, come from the design bad characters, and had left the to be unjust-most of them from country for the United States, as, sloth, or incapacity to grapple with happily for England, bad characters the difficulties of being just. Sins were wont to do.

when he was far away, amidst the Large and obtrusive to view, we forlorn pomp of some old Italian have confessed, mourned, repented, city, and Lionel's tale of the little possibly atoned them. Sins of omisgirl not very fresh in his gloomy sion, so veiled amidst our hourly thoughts. Naturally, he supposed emotions-blent, confused, unseen, that the boy had been duped by a in the conventional routine of exispretty face and his own inexpe- tence; -Alas! could these suddenly rienced kindly heart: And so and emerge from their shadow, group so-why, so end half the efforts of together in serried mass and acmen who intrust to others the trou- cusing order - alas, alas! would not blesome execution of humane in- the best of us then start in distentions! The scales of earthly may, and would not the proudest justice are poised in their quivering humble himself at the Throne of equilibrium, not by huge hundred- Mercy!

him that, after great pains and pro- | weights, but by infinitesimal grains, of commission may not perhaps. That letter reached Guy Darrell shock the retrospect of conscience.

CHAPTER XIX.

Joy, nevertheless, does return to Mr. Rugge; and Hope now inflicts herself on Mrs. Crane, A very fine-looking Hope, too-six feet one-strong as Achilles, and as fleet of foot !

Mrs. Crane's door: admit him. He bursts into her drawing-room, wiping his brows.

" Ma'am, they're off to America!-" " So I have heard. You are fairly money-"

"Entitled, of course-but-" "There it is: restore to me the contract for the child's services."

notes, and could scarcely believe her. But you are every inch a

BUT we have left Mr. Rugge at his eyes. He darted forth his hand. the notes receded like the dagger in Macbeth-" First the contract." said Mrs. Crane. Rugge drew out his greasy pocket-book, and extracted

"Henceforth, then," said Mrs. entitled to the return of your Crane, "you have no right to complain; and whether or not the girl ever again fall in your way, your claim over her ceases."

the worthless engagement.

"The gods be praised! it does, Rugge gazed on a roll of bank- ma'am; I have had quite enough of lady, and allow me to add, that I | day or two since I should have said, put you on my free list for life."

Rugge gone ; Arabella Crane summoned Bridgett to her presence.

"Lor, miss," cried Bridgett, impulsively, "who'd think you'd been up all night raking! I have not seen you look so well this many a vear."

Ah," said Arabella Crane, "I will tell you why. I have done what for many a year I never thought I should do again-a good action. That child-that Sophyyou remember how cruelly I used her?"

"Oh, miss, don't go for to blame yourself; you fed her, you clothed her, when her own father, the villing, sent her away from hisself to you-you of all people-wow. How could you be caressing and fawning on his child-their child?"

Mrs. Cranehungher head gloomily. "What is past is past. I have lived to save that child, and a curse seems lifted from my soul. Now listen, I shall leave London-England, probably this evening. You will keep this house; it will be ready for me any moment I return. The agent who collects my house-rents will give you money as you want it. Stint not yourself, Bridgett, I have been saving, and saving, and saving, for dreary years-nothing else to interest me-and I am richer than

I seem." "But where are you going, miss?" said Bridgett, slowly recovering from the stupefaction occasioned by her mistress's announcement.

" I don't know-I don't care."

"Oh. gracious stars! is it with that dreadful Jasper Losely ?-it is, it is. You are crazed, you are bewitched, miss!"

" Possibly I am crazed-possibly evil mine has ever known; and a manded so good a view therein that with rage and shame, 'I cannot help it; I loathe myself that I can care what becomes of him.' Now, without rage, without shame, I say, 'The man whom I once so loved shall not die on a gibbet if I can help it; and, please Heaven, help it I will."

The grim woman folded her arms on her breast, and raising her head to its full height, there was in her face and air a stern gloomy grandeur. which could not have been seen without a mixed sensation of compassion and awe.

"Go, now, Bridgett; I have said all. He will be here soon; he will come-he must come-he has no choice: and then-and then-" she olosed her eyes, bowed her head, and shivered.

Arabella Crane was, as usual, right in her predictions. Before noon Jasper came-came, not with his jocund swagger, but with that sidelong sinister look-look of the man whom the world cuts-triumphantly restored to its former place in his visage. Madame Caumartin had been arrested; Poole had gone into the country with Uncle Sam : Jasper had seen a police-officer at the door of his own lodgings. He slunk away from the fashionable thoroughfares -slunk to the recesses of Podden Place-slunk into Arabella Crane's prim drawing-room, and said, sullenly, "All is up; here I am!"

Three days afterwards, in a quiet street in a quiet town of Belgiumwherein a sharper, striving to live by his profession, would soon become a skeleton-in a commodious airy apartment, looking upon a magnificent street, the reverse of noisy, Jasper Losely sat secure, innocuous, and profoundly miserable. In another house, the windows of which bewitched; but I take that man's |-facing those of Jasper's sittinglife to mine as a penance for all the room, from an upper story-comstood a woman?) or whatever in earlier life might have been their reciprocated yows of eternal lovepresented himself in Podden Place, the rigid nature of their intercourse | 1T ?

it placed him under a surveillance invested her. The additional cost akin to that designed by Mr. Bent- strained her pecuniary resources. ham's reformatory Panopticon, sat but she saved in her own accommo-Arabella Crane. Whatever her real dation in order to leave Jasper no feelings towards Jasper Losely (and cause to complain of any stinting in what those feelings were no virile his. There, then, she sate by her pen can presume authoritatively to window, herself unseen, eveing him define; for lived there ever a man in his opposite solitude, accepting who thoroughly-thoroughly under- for her own life a barren sacrifice, but a jealous sentinel on his. Meditating as she sate, and as she eved him-meditating what employment not only from the day that Jasper, she could invent, with the bribe of on his return to his native shores, emoluments to be paid furtively by her, for those strong hands that had their intimacy been restricted could have felled an ox, but were to the austerest bonds of friendship, nerveless in turning an honest penny but after Jasper had so rudely de- -and for that restless mind, hunclined the hand which now fed him, gering for occupation, with the di-Arabella Crane had probably per- gestion of an ostrich for dice and ceived that her sole chance of re- debauch, riot and fraud, but queasy taining intellectual power over his as an exhausted dyspeptic at the relawless being, necessitated the utter ception of one innocent amusement, relinquishment of every hope or one honourable toil. But while that project that could expose her again to woman still schemes how to rescue his contempt. Suiting appearances from hulks or halter that execrable to reality, the decorum of a sepa- man, who shall say that he is rate house was essential to the main- without a chance? A chance he tenance of that authority with which has-WHAT WILL HE DO WITH

BOOK V .- CHAPTER I.

Envy will be a science when it learns the use of the microscope.

WHEN leaves fall and flowers fade, | certain whither you would emerge; great people are found in their no devious stream to follow. The country-seats. Look! - that is very deer, fat and heavy, seemed Montfort Court. A place of regal bored by pastures it would take them magnificence, so far as extent of a week to traverse. People of modepile and amplitude of domain could rate wishes and modest fortunes satisfy the pride of ownership, or never envied Montfort Court, they inspire the visitor with the respect due to wealth and power. An artist could have made nothing of it. The they say, Sumptuous everywhere - the Picturesque nowhere. The House was built in the reign of George I., when first commenced that horror of the beautiful, as something in bad taste. which, agreeably to our natural love of progress, progressively advanced through the reigns of succeeding Georges. An enormous façadein dull-brown brick-two wings and a centre, with double flights of steps to the hall-door from the carriagesweep. No trees allowed to grow too near the house; in front, a stately flat with stone balustrades. But wherever the eye turned, there was nothing to be seen but park--miles upon miles of park; not a cornfield in sight-not a roof-tree-not a spire-only those lata silentia of the house. Lady Montfort's -still widths of turf, and, somewhat flower-garden. Yes; not so dull !thinly scattered and afar, those flowers, even autumnal flowers, engroves of giant trees. The whole liven any sward. Still, on so large prospect so vast and so monotonous a scale, and so little relief; so little that it never tempted you to take a mystery about those broad gravelwalk. No close-neighbouring poetic walks; not a winding alley anythicket into which to plunge un- where. Oh for a vulgar summer-admired it-they were proud to say they had seen it. But never did

"Oh, that for me some home like this would smile!"

Not so, very-very great people !they rather coveted than admired. Those oak trees so large, yet so undecayed-that park, eighteen miles at least in circumference—that solid palace which, without inconvenience, could entertain and stow away a king and his whole court; in short, all that evidence of a princely territory, and a weighty rent-roll, made English dukes respectfully envious, and foreign potentates gratifyingly jealous. But turn from the front. Open the gate in that stone balustrade. Come southward to the garden side suckle and ivy! But the dahlias am so glad to find you at home. are splendid! Very true; only, teresting prosy things. What poet ever wrote upon a dahlia! Surely Lady Montfort might have introduced a little more taste here shown a little more fancy! Lady Montfort! I should like to see my lord's face, if Lady Montfort took any such liberty. But there is Lady Montfort walking slowly along that broad, hroad gravel-walkthose splendid dahlias, on either |-his cousin-he had known her side, in their set parterres. There from his childhood. she walks, in full evidence from all those sixty remorseless windows on the garden front, each window exactly like the other. There she walks, looking wistfully to the far end-('tis a long way off)-where, you?" happily, there is a wicket that carries a persevering pedestrian out of to do so." sight of the sixty windows, into shady walks, towards the banks of over-scrupulous? You would be that immense piece of water, two miles from the house. My lord has not returned from his moor in Scotland-my lady is alone. No company in the house-it is like saying, "No acquaintance in a city." But the retinue in full. Though she dined alone, she might, had she pleased, have had almost as many servants to gaze upon her as there were windows now staring at her lonely walk, with their glassy spectral eyes.

persons walking in them to be swered. seen.

house; for some alcove, all honey- visitor, stammering painfully, "I

"At home, George!" said the dahlias, at the best, are such unin- lady, extending her hand; "where else is it likely that I should be found? But how pale you are.

What has happened?"

She seated herself on a bench, under a cedar-tree, just without the wicket, and George Morley, our old friend the Oxonian, seated himself hy her side familiarly, hut with a certain reverence. Lady Montfort was a few years older than himself

"What has happened!" he repeated; "nothing new. I have just come from visiting the good hishop."

"He does not hesitate to ordain

"No-but I shall never ask him

" My dear cousin, are you not an ornament to the Church, sufficient in all else to justify your compulsory omission of one duty, which a curate could perform for yon." Morley shook his head sadly. "One duty omitted!" said he. "But is it not that duty which distinguishes the priest from the layman? and how far extends that duty? Wherever there needs a voice to speak the Word-not in the pulpit only, hut at the hearth, by the sick-bed-there should be the Just as Lady Montfort gains the Pastor! No-I cannot, I ought wicket she is overtaken by a visitor, not, I dare not! Incompetent as walking fast from the gravel sweep | the labourer, how can I be worthy hy the front door, where he has dis- of the hire?" It took him long to mounted - where he has caught hring out these words; his emotion sight of her; any one so dismount- increased his infirmity. Lady Monting might have caught sight of her fort listened with an exquisite -could not help it. Gardens so respect, visible in her compassion, fine, were made on purpose for fine and paused long before she an-

George Morley was the vounger "Ah, Lady Montfort," said the son of a country gentleman, with a good estate settled upon the elder | the bishop's own discretionary nower intimate friend of his kinsman, the Marquess of Montfort (predecessor and grandsire of the present lord); and the Marquess had, as he thought, amply provided for George in undertaking to secure to him, when of fitting age, the living of Humberston, the most lucrative preferment in his gift. The living had been held for the last fifteen years by an incumbent, now very old, upon the honourable understanding that it was to be resigned in favour of George, should George take orders. The young man from his earliest childhood thus destined to the Church, devoted to the prospect of that profession all his studies, all his thoughts. Not till he was sixteen did his infirmity of speech make itself seriously perceptible; and then elocution-masters undertook to cure it-they failed. But George's mind continued in the direction towards which it had been so systematically biassed. Entering Oxford, he became absorbed in its academical shades. Amidst his books he almost forgot the impediment of his speech. Shy, taciturn, and solitary, he mixed too little with others to have it much brought before his own notice. He carried off prizes-he took high honours. On leaving the university, a profound theologian-an enthusiastic churchsense of the pastor's solemn calling -he was thus complimentarily accosted by the Archimandrite of his college. "What a pity you cannot go into the Church !" "Cannot-but I am going into the Church."

"You! is it possible? But, perhaps, you are sure of a living-"Yes-Humberston."

large population. Certainly it is in of policy; not less the House of son. George's father had been an to ordain you, and for all the duties you can keep a curate. But-" the Don stopped short, and took snuff.

That "But" said as plainly as words could say, " It may be a good thing for you, but is it fair for the Church?"

So George Morley, at least, thought that "But" implied. His conscience took alarm. He was a thoroughly noble-hearted man, likely to be the more tender of conscience where tempted by worldly interests. With that living he was rich, without it very poor. But to give up a calling, to the idea of which he had attached himself with all the force of a powerful and zealous nature, was to give up the whole scheme and dream of his existence. He remained irresolute for some time: at last he wrote to the present Lord Montfort, intimating his doubts, and relieving the Marquess from the engagement which his lordship's predecessor had made. The present Marquess was not a man capable of understanding such scruples. But, luckily perhaps for George and for the Church, the larger affairs of the great House of Montfort were not administered by the Marquess. The parliamentary influences, the ecclesiastical preferments, together with the practical direction of minor agents to the vast and complicated estates attached to the title, were at man, filled with the most earnest | that time under the direction of Mr. Carr Vipont, a powerful member of Parliament, and husband to that Lady Selina whose condescension had so disturbed the nerves of Frank Vance the artist, Mr. Carr Vipont governed this vice-royalty according to the rules and traditions by which the House of Montfort had become great and prosperous. For not only every state, but every great seignorial "An immense living, but a very House has its hereditary maxims was, nevertheless, a most efficient back with greater force than everclergyman. George Morley, there- with greater force, because he felt

Montfort than the House of Haps- fore, had gone down to Montfort burg. Now the House of Montfort Court some months ago, just after made it a rule that all admitted to his interview with Mrs. Crane. He be members of the family should had then accepted an invitation to help each other; that the head of spend a week or two with the Rev. the House should never, if it could Mr. Allsop, the Rector of Humberbe avoided, suffer any of its branches ston-a clergyman of the old school, to decay and wither into poverty, a fair scholar, a perfect gentleman, The House of Montfort also held it a man of the highest honour, gooda duty to foster and make the most natured, charitable, but who took of every species of talent that could pastoral duties much more easily swell the influence or adorn the than good clergymen of the new annals of the family. Having rank, school-be they high or low-are having wealth, it sought also to disposed to do. Mr. Allson, who secure intellect, and to knit together was then in his eightieth year, a into solid union, throughout all bachelor with a very good forramifications of kinship and cousin- tune of his own, was perfectly hood, each variety of repute and willing to fulfil the engagement on power that could root the ancient which he held his living, and render tree more firmly in the land. Agree- it up to George; but he was touched ably to this traditional policy, Mr. by the earnestness with which Carr Vipont not only desired that a George assured him that at all Vipont Morley should not lose a events he would not consent to disvery good thing, but that a very place the venerable incumbent from good thing should not lose a Vipont atenure he had so long and honour-Morley of high academical distinc- ably held-and would wait till the tion-a Vipont Morley who might living was vacated in the ordinary be a bishop! He therefore drew course of nature. Mr. Allsop conup an admirable letter, which the ceived a warm affection for the Marquess signed - that the Mar- young scholar. He had a grandquess should take the trouble of niece staying with him on a visit, copying it was out of the question who less openly, but not less warmly, -wherein Lord Montfort was made shared that affection; and with her to express great admiration of the George Morley fell shyly and timodisinterested delicacy of sentiment, rously in love. With that living he which proved George Vipont Morley | would be rich enough to marry— to be still more fitted to the oure of without it, no. Without it he had souls; and, placing rooms at Mont- nothing but a fellowship, which fort Court at his service (the Mar- matrimony would forfeit, and the quess not being himself there at scanty portion of a country squire's the moment), suggested that George younger son. The young lady hershould talk the matter over with self was dowerless, for Allsop's forthe present incumbent of Humber- tune was so settled that no share of ston (that town was not many miles it would come to his grand-niece. distant from Montfort Court), who, Another reason for conscience to though he had no impediment in gulpdown that unhappy impediment his speech, still never himself of speech! Certainly, during this preached nor read prayers, owing to visit, Morley's scruples relaxed; but an affection of the traches, and who when he returned home they came was essentially required. His mind subdued his stutter,-

that now not only a spiritual ambi- suggestion the hishop of the diocese tion, but a human love was a casuist being then at his palace, had sent to see in favour of self-interest. He had him; and, while granting the force of returned on a visit to Humberston his scruples, had yet said, "Mine is Rectory about a week previous to the main responsibility. But if you the date of this chapter-the niece ask me to ordain you, I will do so was not there. Sternly he had forced without hesitation; for if the Church himself to examine a little more wants preachers, it also wants deep closely into the condition of the flock scholars and virtuous pastors." which (if he accepted the charge) he Fresh from this interview, George would have to guide, and the duties Morley came to announce to Lady that devolved upon a chief pastor in | Montfort that his resolve was una populous trading town. He became shaken. She, I have said, paused appalled. Humberston, like most long before she answered. "George," towns under the political influence she began at last, in a voice so of a great House, was rent by parties. touchingly sweet that its very sound One party, who succeeded in return- was balm to a wounded spirit-"I ing one of the two members for must not argue with yon-I bow Parliament, all for the House of before the grandenr of your motives, Montfort; the other party, who and I will not say that you are not returned also their member, all right. One thing I do feel, that if against it. By one-half the town, you thus sacrifice your inclinations whatever came from Montfort and interests from scruples so pure Court was sure to be regarded with and hely, you will never be to be a most malignant and distorted pitied-you will never know regret. vision. Meanwhile, though Mr. Poor or rich, single or wedded, a Allsop was popular with the higher soul that so seeks to reflect heaven classes, and with such of the extreme | will be serene and blessed." Thus poor as his charity relieved, his pas- she continued to address him for toral influence generally was a dead some time, he all the while inexletter. His curate, who preached pressibly soothed and comforted: for him-a good young man, but then gradually she insinuated hopes extremely dull-was not one of those even of a worldly and temporal kind preachers who fill a church. Trades - literature was left to him-the men wanted an excuse to stay away scholar's pen, if not the preacher's or choose another place of worship; voice. In literature he might make and they contrived to hear some a career that would lead on to forpassage in the sermons, over which, tune. There were places also in the while the curate mumbled, they public service to which a defect in habitually slept-that they declared speech was no obstacle. She knew to be "Puseyite." The church be- his secret, modest attachment; she came deserted; and about the same alluded to it just enough to encontime a very eloquent Dissenting rage constancy and rebuke despair. minister appeared at Humberston, As she ceased, his admiring and and even professed churchfolks went grateful consciousness of his cousin's to hear him. George Morley, alas! rare qualities changed the tide of perceived that at Humberston, if his emotions towards her from himthe Church there were to hold her self, and he exclaimed with an own, a powerful and popular preacher earnestness that almost wholly was now made up. At Carr Vipont's "What a counsellor you are! - less prosperous or more ambitious. what a treasure, either to console or to sustain, in a mind like yours!"

As those words were said, you might have seen at once why Lady Montfort was called haughty and reserved. Her lip seemed suddenly to snatch back its sweet smile-her dark eye, before so purely, softly friend-like, became coldly distantthe tones of her voice were not the same as she answered-

"Lord Montfort values me, as it is, far beyond my merits: far," she added, with a different intonation, gravely mournful.

"Forgive me; I have displeased forbid that I should presume either to disparage Lord Montfort-orhiatus hy a convenient stammer. " Only." he continued, after a pause, "only forgive me this once. Recollect I was a little boy when you were a young lady, and I have pelted you with snowballs, and called you Caroline." Lady Montfort suppressed a sigh, and gave the young scholar hack her gracious smile, but not a smile that would have permitted him to call her "Caroline" again. She remained, indeed, a little more distant than usual during the rest of their interview, which was not much prolonged; for Morley felt annoyed with himself that he had so indiscreetly offended her, and seized an excuse to escape. "By the by," said he, "I have a letter from Mr. Carr Vipont, asking me to give him a sketch for a Gothic hridge to the water yonder. I will, with your leave, walk down and look at the proposed site. Only do say that you forgive me."

"Forgive you, cousin George, oh yes. One word only-it is true you were a child still when I fancied I was a woman, and you have a right tered with the letters by the after-what a soother! If Montfortwerehut | to talk to me upon all things, except those that relate to me and Lord Montfort; unless, indeed," she added with a bewitching half laugh. "unless you ever see cause to scold me, there. Good-hy, my cousin, and in turn forgive me, if I was so petulant. The Caroline you pelted with snowballs was always a wayward, impulsive creature, quick to take offence, to misunderstand, and -to repent."

Back into the hroad, broad gravelwalk, walked, more slowly than be-fore, Lady Montfort. Again the sixty ghastly windows stared at her with all their eyes-back from the gravel-walk, through a side-door you. I did not mean it. Heaven into the pompous solitude of the stately house-across long chambers, where the mirrors reflected her or to-" he stopped short, saying the form, and the huge chairs, in their flaunting damask and flaring gold. stood stiff on desolate floors-into her own private room - neither large nor splendid that; plain chintzes, quiet book shelves. She need not have been the Marchioness of Montfort to inhabit a room as pleasant and as luxurious. And the rooms that she could only have owned as Marchioness, what were those worth to her happiness? T know not. "Nothing," fine ladies will perhaps answer. Yet those same fine ladies will contrive to dispose their daughters to answer. "All." In her own room Lady Montfort sunk on her chair: wearily-wearily she looked at the clock-wearily at the books on the shelves-at the harp near the window. Then she leant her face on her hand, and that face was so sad, and so humbly sad, that you would have wondered how any one could call Lady Montfort proud.

"Treasure! I - I! worthless, fickle; credulous fool !-I-I!"

The groom of the chambers en-

noon post. That Great House con- | "I shall he more alone in a court trived to worry itself with two posts than here," murmured Lady Monta-day. A royal command to Wind- fort. sor-

CHAPTER II.

Truly saith the proverb, " Much corn lies under the straw that is not seen."

MEANWHILE George Morley fol- So would have said the scholar. lowed the long shady walk - very for he had a true sentiment for handsome walk, full of prize roses nature, if the bridge had not clean and rare exotics-artificially winding, too-walk so well kept that it took thirty-four men to keep itnoble walk, tiresome walk - till it questered bank of the wide water, brought him to the great piece of closed round on every side by brushwater, which, perhaps, four times wood, or still, patriarchal trees. in the year was visited by the great folks in the Great House. And be- an idea struck him-one of those ing thus out of the immediate patronage of fashion, the great piece of water really looked natural companionable, refreshing-you be- or most anxious moods. Was his gan to hreathe-to unbutton your infirmity really incurable? Elocuwaistcoat, loosen your neckclothquote Chaucer, if you could recol-lect him, or Cowper, or Shakespeare, good. Yet had not the greatest any scraps of verse that came into in utterance? He too, Demostheyour head-as your feet grew joyously entangled with fern-as the elocution - masters, the best in trees grouped forest-like before and Athens, where elocution - masters round yon-trees which there be must have studied their art ad ing out of sight, were allowed to unquem, and the defect had baffled trunked, some pollarded-trees in- himself-How? Was it not one of she souds! See, the deer marching pehbles, and practise manfully to down to the water-side. What the roaring sea? George Morley groves of bulrushes - islands of had never tried the effect of pehbles. water-lily! And to throw a Go- Was there any virtue in them? thio bridge there, bring a great Why not try? No sea there, it is gravel road over the hridge! Oh, true; hut a sea was only useful as shame, shame!

gone out of his head.

Wandering alone, he came at last to the most umbrageous and se-

Suddenly he arrested his stepsodd, whimsical, grotesque ideas which often when we are alone come across us, even in our quietest tion-masters had said, "certainly or Thomson's Seasons; in short, orator the world ever knew a defect nes, had, no doubt, paid fees to grow too old to be worth five shil- them. But did Demosthenes delings a-piece, moss-grown, hollow- spair? No, he resolved to cure valuable! Ha, the hare! How his methods to fill his mouth with representing the noise of a stormy democratic audience. To represent a peaceful congregation that still sheet of water would do as well. Pebbles there were in plenty just by that gravelly cove, near which a young pike lay sunning his green back. Half in jest, half in earnest, the scholar picked up a handful of pebbles, wiped them from sand and mould, inserted them between his teeth cautiously, and, looking round to assure himself that none were by, began an extempore discourse. So interested did he become in that classical experiment, that he might have tortured the air and astonished the magnies (three of whom from a neighbouring thicket listened perfectly spell-bound) for more than half an hour, when, seized with shame at the Indicrous impotence of his exertions-with despair that so wretched a barrier should stand between his mind and its expression -he flung away the pebbles, and sinking on the ground, he fairly wept-wept like a baffled child.

The fact was, that Morley had really the temperament of an orator; he had the orator's gifts in warmth of passion, rush of thought, logical arrangement; there was in him the genius of a great preacher. He felt it-he knew it: and in that despair which only Genius knows, when some pitiful cause obstructs its energies and strikes down its powers-making a confident of Solitude-he went loud and freely.

"Do not despond, sir, I undertake to cure you," said a voice behind.

George started up in confusion; a man, elderly, but fresh and vigorous, stood beside him, in a light fustian jacket, a blue apron, and with rushes in his hands, which he continued to plait together nimbly and deftly as he bowed to the startled scholar.

yonder, sir: pardon me. I could not help hearing you."

The Oxonian rubbed his eyes, and stared at the man with a vague impression that he had seen him before-When? Where?

"You can cure me," he stuttered out: "what of?-the folly of trying to speak in public. Thank you, I am cured."

"Nay, sir, you see before you a man who can make you a very good speaker. Your voice is naturally fine. I repeat, I can cure a defect which is not in the organ, but in the management!"

"You can! you-who and what are you?"

"A basket-maker, sir; I hope for your custom." "Surely this is not the first time I have seen you?"

"True, you once kindly suffered me to borrow a resting-place on your father's land. One good turn deserves another."

At that moment Sir Isaac peered through the brambles, and restored to his original whiteness, and relieved from his false, horned ears, marched gravely towards the water. sniffed at the scholar, slightly wagged his tail, and buried himself amongst the reeds in search of a water-rat he had therein disturbed a week before, and always expected to find

The sight of the dog immediately cleared up the cloud in the scholar's memory; but with recognition came back a keen curiosity and a sharp pang of remorse.

"And your little girl?" he asked, looking down abashed.

"Better than she was when we last met. Providence is so kind Poor Waife, he never gnessed that to the person he thus revealed himself he owed the grief for Sophy's "I was in the shade of the thicket abduction. He divined no reason for the scholar's flushing cheek and | time; take a whiff from my pipeembarrassed manner.

"Yes, sir, we have just settled in the impediment." this neighbourhood. I have a pretty cottage yonder at the outskirts of you that man ever had. There's the village, and near the park-pales. I recognised you at once; and as I heard you just now, I called to mind change the parties in the contract, that, when we met before, you said your calling should be the Church. were it not for your difficulty in utterance; and I said to myself, 'no bad things those pebbles, if his utterance were thick, which it is not; and I have not a doubt, sir, that the true fault of Demosthenes, whom I presume you are imitating.

nose." "Eh!" said the scholar, "through his nose? I never knew that !-

and I-" "And you are trying to sneak without lungs; that is, without air sume?"

" No-certainly not." "You must learn—speak between each slow puff of your pipe. All you want is time-time to quiet the nerves, time to think, time to breathe. The moment you begin to stammer-stop-fill the lungs thus, then try again! It is only a clever man who can learn to write; that is, to compose; but any fool can be taught to speak-Courage!"

"If you really can teach me." cried the learned man, forgetting all self-reproach for his betraval of Waife to Mrs. Crane in the absorbing interest of the hope that sprang draw your breath when I do." up within him-"If you can teach me-If I can but con-con-conconq-"

"Slowly - slowly - breath and that's right. Yes, you can conquer "Then I will be the best friend to my hand on it."

"I take it, but I ask leave to I don't want a friend, I don't deserve one. You'll be a friend to my little girl instead; and if ever I ask you to help me in aught for her welfare and happiness-"

"I will help, heart and soul! slight indeed any service to her or to you compared with such service to me. Free this wretched tongue from its stammer, and thought and was that he spoke through his zeal will not stammer whenever you say, 'Keep your promise.' I am so glad your little girl is still with you." Waife looked surprised-" Is still with me!-why not?"

The scholar bit his tongue. That in them. You don't smoke, I prewas not the moment to confess; it might destroy all Waife's confidence in him.-He would do so later .- "When shall I begin my lesson?"

"Now, if you like. But have you a book in your pocket?"

"I always have."

"Not Greek, I hope, sir?"

" No. a volume of Barrow's Sermons, Lord Chatham recommended those sermons to his great son as a study for eloquence," "Good! .Will you lend me the volume, sir? and now for it, listen to me-one sentence at a time-

The three magnies pricked up their ears again, and, as they listened, marvelled much.

CHAPTER III.

Could we know by what strange circumstances a man's genius became prepared for practical success, we should discover that the most serviceable items in his education were never entered in the bills which his father paid for it.

AT the end of the very first lesson, |-the struggling utterance. But George Morley saw that all the elocution-masters to whose skill he had been consigned were blunderers in comparison to the basket-maker.

Waife did not puzzle him with scientific theories. All that the great comedian required of him was to observe and to imitate. Observation, imitation, lo! the groundwork of all art! the primal elements of all genius! Not there, indeed, to halt, but there ever to commence. What remains to carry on the intellect to mastery ?-Two steps-to reflect, to reproduce. Observation. imitation, reflection, reproduction. In these stands a mind complete and consummate, fit to cope with all labour, achieve all success.

At the end of the first lesson George Morley felt that his cure was possible. Making an appointment for the next day at the same place, he came thither stealthily, and so on day by day. At the end of a week he felt that the cure was nearly certain; at the end of a month the cure was self-evident. He should live to preach the Word. True, that he practised incessantly in private. Not a moment in his waking hours that the one thought, one object, were absent from his mind; true, that with all his patience. all his toil, the obstacle was yet serious, might never be entirely overcome. Nervous hurry - rapidity of action - vehemence of feeling gasping breath-the emptied lungs ashamed.

the relapse-rarer and rarer now with each trial, would be at last scarce a drawback. "Nay," quoth Waife, "instead of a drawback, become but an orator, and you will convert a defect into a beauty." Thus justly sanguine of the accomplishment of his life's chosen object, the scholar's gratitude to Waife was unspeakable. And seeing the man daily at last in his own cottage-Sophy's health restored to her oheeks, smiles to her lip, and cheered at her light fancy-work beside her grandsire's elbow-chair. with fairy legends instilling perhaps golden truths-seeing Waife thus, the scholar mingled with gratitude a strange tenderness of respect. Heknew nought of the vagrant's pasthis reason might admit that in a position of life so at variance with the gifts natural and acquired of the singular basket-maker, there was something mysterious and suspicious. But he blushed to think that he had ever ascribed to a flawed or wandering intellect, the eccentricities of glorious Humourabetted an attempt to separate an old age so innocent and genial from a childhood so fostered and so fostering. And sure I am that if the whole world had risen up to point the finger of scorn at the one-eyed cripple, George Morley, the wellborn gentleman—the refined scholar -the spotless churchman-would brought back, might, at unguarded have given him his arm to lean moments, always bring back the upon, and walked by his side un-

CHAPTER IV.

To judge human character rightly, a man may sometimes have very small experience, provided he has a very large heart, private and confidential.

might say it was for yours;" the incidentally learn that Waife had Oxonian promised, and was bound. some months previously visited the Fortunately, Lady Montfort, quit- village, and proposed to the bailiff to ting the great house the very day take the cottage and osier land, after George had first encountered which he now rented-that he reprethe basket-maker, and writing word sented himself as having known an that she should not return to it for old basket-maker who had dwelt some weeks-George was at liberty there many years ago, and as having to avail himself of her lord's general learned the basket craft of that long invitation to make use of Montfort deceased operative. As he offered a Court as his lodgings when in the higher rent than the bailiff could neighbourhood, which the proprie- elsewhere obtain, and as the bailiff ties of the world would not have was desirous to get credit with Mr. allowed him to do while Lady Carr Vipont for improving the pro-Montfort was there without either perty, by reviving thereon an art host or female guests. Accordingly, which had fallen into desuetude, he took up his abode in a corner of the bargain was struck, provided the vast palace, and was easily the candidate, being a stranger to enabled, when he pleased, to traverse the place, could furnish the bailiff unobserved the solitudes of the park, with any satisfactory reference. gain the waterside, or stroll thence Waife had gone away, saying he through the thick copse leading to should shortly return with the re-Waife's cottage, which bordered quisite testimonial. In fact, poor the park pales, solitary, sequestered, man, as we know, he was then beyond sight of the neighbouring counting on a good word from Mr.

NUMA POMPILIUS did not more village. The great house all to conceal from notice the lessons he himself. George was brought in received from Egeria, than did contact with no one to whom in George Morley those which he unguarded moments, he could even received from the basket-maker, have let out a hint of his new Natural, indeed, must be his wish acquaintance, except the clergyman for secresy-pretty story it would be of the parish, a worthy man, who for Humberston, its future rector lived in strict retirement upon a learning how to preach a sermon scanty stipend. For the Marquess from an old basket-maker! But he was the lav impropriator; the living had a nobler and more imperious was therefore but a very poor motive for discretion-his honour vicarage, below the acceptance of a was engaged to it. Waife exacted a Vipont or a Vipont's tutor-sure to promise that he would regard the go to a worthy man forced to live in intercourse between them as strictly strict retirement. George saw too little of this olergyman, either to let "It is for my sake I ask this," out secrets or pick up information. said Waife, frankly, "though I From him, however, George did returned for some months. The cottage, having been meanwhile wanted for the temporary occupation of an under gamekeeper, while his own was under repair, fortunately remained unlet. Waife, on returning, accompanied by his little girl. had referred the bailiff to a respectable honse-agent and collector of street rents in Bloomsbury, who wrote word that a lady, then abroad. had authorised him, as the agent employed in the management of a house property from which much of her income was derived, not only to state that Waife was a very intelligent man, likely to do well whatever he undertook, but also to guarantee. if required, the punctual payment of the rent for any holding of which he became the occupier. On this the agreement was concluded-the basket-maker installed. In the immediate neighbourhood there was no oustom for basket-work, but Waife's performances were so neat. and some so elegant and fanciful. that he had no difficulty in contracting with a large tradesman (not at Humberston, but a more distant and yet more thriving town about twenty miles off) for as much of such work as he could supply. Each week the carrier took his goods and brought back the payments; the profits amply sufficed for Waife's and Sophy's daily bread, with even more than the surplus set aside for the rent. For the rest, the basketmaker's cottage being at the farthest outskirts of the straggling village inhabited but by a labouring peasantry, his way of life was not much known, nor much inquired into. He seemed a harmless hard-working man-never seen at the beerhouse, always seen with his neatly-dressed little grandchild in his quiet corner at church on Sundays-a civil, wellbehaved man too, who touched bis Hartopp. He had not, however but to the bailiff, and took it off to returned for some months. The the vicar.

An idea prevailed that the basketmaker had spent much of his life in foreign countries, favoured partly by a sobriety of babits which is not altogether national, partly by something in his appearance, which, without being above his lowly calling, did not seem quite in keeping with it-outlandish in short,-but principally by the fact that he had received since his arrival two letters with a foreign postmark. The idea befriended the old man; allowing it to be inferred that he had probably outlived the friends he had formerly left behind him in England, and on his return, been sufficiently fatigued with his rambles to drop contented in any corner of his native soil, wherein he could find a quiet home. and earn by light toil a decent livelihood.

George, though naturally curious to know what had been the result of his communication to Mrs. Crane -whether it had led to Waife's discovery, or caused him annovancehad hitherto, however, shrunk from touching upon a topic which subjected himself to an awkward confession of officious intermeddling. and to which any indirect allusion might appear an indelicate attempt to pry into painful family affairs. But one day he received a letter from his father which disturbed him greatly, and induced bim to break ground and speak to his preceptor frankly. In this letter, the elder Mr. Morley mentioned incidentally amongst other scraps of local news. that he had seen Mr. Hartopp, who was rather out of sorts, his good heart not having recovered the shock of having been abominably "taken in" by an impostor for whom he had conceived a great fancy, and to whose discovery George bimself had providentially what George had told him of his musical sound can affect the brute first meeting with Waife, and his creation." He resumed the whistle visit to Mrs. Crane), the impostor, -a clearer, louder, wilder tuneit seemed, from what Mr. Hartopp that of a lively hunting-song. The let fall-not being a little queer in deer turned quickly round-uneasy, the head, as George had been led to surmise-but a very bad character. "In fact," added the elder Morley, "a character so bad, that Mr. Hartopp was too glad to give up to her lawful protectors the child, whom the man appears to have abducted; and I suspect, from what Hartopp said, though he does not like to own that he was taken in to so gross a degree, that he had been actually introducing to his fellow-townsfolk, and conferring familiarly, with a regular jail-bird-perhaps a burglar. How lucky for that poor, softheaded, excellent Jos Hartoppwhom it is positively as inhuman to take in as it would be to defraud a born natural—that the lady you saw arrived in time to expose the snares his acquaintance. Man commits a laid for his benevolent credulity. But for that, Jos might have taken more intimate and amicable relathe fellow into his own house-(just tions with the other branches of like him!)-and been robbed by this time - perhaps murdered-Heaven knows!"

Incredulous and indignant, and longing to be empowered to vindicate his friend's fair name, George seized his hat, and strode quick along the path towards the basketmaker's oottage. As he gained the water-side, he perceived Waife himself, seated on a mossy bank, under a gnarled fantastic thorn-tree, watching a deer as it came to drink, and on a window-pane, two minnows in tune of an old English border-song, to us interesting points of contrast The deer lifted its antiers from the as to temper and disposition. water, and turned its large bright house-flies and minnows could but eyes towards the opposite bank, coin money, or set up a manufacwhence the note came-listening ture-contrive something, in short, and wistful. crushed the wild thyme, which the Saxon enterprise and intelligencethorn-tree shadowed-" Hush," said of course we should soon have diplo-

led (the father referring here to | Waife, "and mark how the rudest restless, tossed its antlers, and bounded through the fern. Waife again changed the key of his primitive music-a melancholy belling note, like the belling itself of a melancholy hart, but more modulated into sweetness. The deer arrested its flight, and, lured by the mimio sound, returned towards tho water-side, slowly and statily. "I don't think the story of Orpheus charming the brutes was a fable-do you, sir?" said Waife. "The rabbits about here know me already; and if I had but a fiddle, I would undertake to make friends with that reserved and unsocial water-rat, on whom Sir Isaac in vain endeavours at present to force great mistake in not cultivating earth's great family. Few of them not more amusing than we are :naturally, for they have not our cares. And such variety of character too, where you would least expect it!'

GEORGE MORLEY .- " Very true : Cowper noticed marked differences of character in his favourite hares." WAIFE,-"Hares! I am sure that there are not two house-flies whistling a soft mellow tune—the that water, that would not present As George's step to buy or sell attractive to Anglomatic relations with them; and our | Yet how consummate may be his despatches and newspapers would instruct us to a T in the characters and propensities of their leading personages. But, where man has no pecuniary nor ambitious interests at stake in his commerce with any class of his fellow-creatures, his information about them is extremely confused and superficial. The best naturalists are mere generalisers. and think they have done a vast deal when they classify a What should we know species. about mankind if we had only a naturalist's definition of man? We only know mankind by knocking classification on the head, and studying each man as a class in himself. Compare Buffon with Shakespeare! Alas, sir-can we never have a Shakespeare for house-flies and minnows?"

GEORGE MORLEY .- " With all respect for minnows and house-flies. if we found another Shakespeare, he might be better employed, like his predecessor, in selecting indivivualities from the classifications of man."

WAIFE.- "Being yourself a man, you think so-a house-fly might be of a different opinion. But permit me, at least, to doubt whether such an investigator would be better employed in reference to his own happiness, though I grant that he would be so in reference to your intellectual amusement and social interests. Poor Shakespeare! How much he must have suffered!"

GEORGE MORLEY .- "You mean that he must have been racked by the passions he describes-bruised the acts, of the prisoner at the bar. with him?-Whatever be the cause, analysis!"

"No," cried Waife, roughly, Your illustration destroys your argument. The judge knows nothing of the prisoner! There are the circumstances-there is the law. By these he generalises-by these he indges-right or wrong. But of the individual at the bar-of the world -the tremendous world within that individual heart - I repeat - he knows nothing. Did he know, law and circumstance might vanishhuman justice would be paralysed. Ho, there! place that swart-visaged, ill-looking foreigner in the dock. and let counsel open the case-hear the witnesses depose! O, horrible wretch !- a mnrderer - unmanly murderer !- a defenceless woman smothered by caitiff hands! Hang him up-hang him up! 'Softly,' whispers the POET, and lifts the veil from the assassin's heart. 'Lo! it is Othello the Moor!' What jury now dare find that criminal guilty? -what judge now will put on the black cap?-who now says, ' Hang him up-hang him up?"

With such lifelike force did the Comedian vent this passionate outburst, that he thrilled his listener with an awe akin to that which the convicted Moor gathers round himself at the close of the sublime drama. Even Sir Isaac was startled: and, leaving his hopeless pursuit of the water-rat, uttered a low bark. came to his master, and looked into his face with solemn curiosity.

WAIFE (relapsing into colloquial accents) .- " Why do we sympathize with those above us more than with by collision with the hearts he those below? why with the sorrows dissects. That is not necessary to of a king rather than those of a genius. The judge on his bench, beggar? why does Sir Isaac symsumming up evidence, and charging pathyze with me more than (let the jury, has no need to have shared that water-rat vex him ever so the temptations, or been privy to much) I can possibly sympathize why a poor creature like myself Mr. Hartopp. Understand me, I finds it better employment to culti- ask for no confidence which you vate the intimacy of brutes than to may be unwilling to give; but if you prosecute the study of men. Among will arm me with the power to vinmen, all are too high to sympathize dicate your character from asperwith me; but I have known two sions which I need not vonr friends who never injured nor be- assurance to hold unjust and false, trayed me. Sir Isaac is one, Wamba I will not rest till that task be was another. native of a remote district of the globe (two friends civilized Europe jected) .- "I thank you with all my is not large enough to afford to any heart. But there is nothing to be one man)-Wamba, sir, was less done. I am glad that the subject gifted by nature, less refined by did not start up between us until education, than Sir Isaac; but he such little service as I could render was a safe and trustworthy comopossum."

GEORGE MORLEY .- " Alas, my must have behaved very ill to you."

benefactors,"

GEORGE MORLEY (with emotion).- "Listen, I have a confession to make to you. I fear I have done you an injury-where, officiously, I meant to do a kindness." The scholar hurried on to narrate the particulars of his visit to Mrs. Crane. On concluding the recital, he added-" When again I met you well, sir." here, and learned that your Sophy was with you, I felt inexpressibly relieved. It was clear then, I thought, that your grandchild had fearfully as he caught Waife firmly been left to your care unmolested, by the arm, "if I suffered-suffeither that you had proved not to suff-suff-" be the person of whom the parties were in search, or family affairs had the Comedian softly. And with a been so explained and reconciled, sweet patience he reseated himself that my interference had occasioned on the bank. you no harm. But to-day I have a letter from my father which dis- length by the Outcast's side; and quiets me much. It seems that the with the noble tenderness of a persons in question did visit Gates- nature as chivalrously Christian as see at least, Mr. Morley, one reason | boro', and have maligned you to Wamba, sir, the triumphantly accomplished."

WAIFE (in a tone calm but deyou, Mr. Morley, was pretty well panion : Wamba, sir, was - an over. It would have been a pity if you had been compelled to drop all communication with a man of atdear Mr. Waife. I fear that men tainted character, before you had learned how to manage the powers WAIFE.-"I have no right to that will enable you hereafter to complain. I have behaved very ill exhort sinners worse than I have to myself. When a man is his own been. Hush, sir! you feel that, at enemy, he is very unreasonable if least now, I am an inoffensive old he expect other men to be his man, labouring for a humble livelihood. You will not repeat here what you may have heard, or yet hear, to the discredit of my former life? You will not send me and my grandchild forth from our obscure refuge to confront a world with which we have no strength to cope? And, believing this, it only remains for me to say, Fare-you-

> "I should deserve to lose spespe-speech altogether," cried the Oxonian, gasping and stammering

"One, two! take time, sir!" said

The Oxonian threw himself at Heaven ever gave to Priest, helto judge and judge harshly, the rested his folded hands upon Waife's shoulder, and looking him full and close in the face, said thus, slowly, deliberately-not a stammer-

"You do not guess what you have done for me; you have secured to me a home and a career-the wife of whom I must otherwise have despaired-the Divine Vocation on which all my earthly hopes were set, and which I was on the eve of renouncing-do not think these are obligations which can be lightly shaken off. If there are oircumstances which forbid me to disabuse others of impressions which wrong you, imagine not that their false notions will affect my own gratitude -my own respect for you!"

"Nay, sir! they ought - they must. Perhaps not your exaggerated gratitude for a service which you should not, however, measure by its effects on yourself, but by the slightness of the trouble it gave to me; not perhaps your gratitudebut your respect, yes."

"I tell you no! Do you fancy that I cannot judge of a man's nature without calling on him to trust me with all the secrets-all the errors, if you will, of his past life? Will not the calling to which I may now hold myself destined give me power and commandment to absolve all those who truly repent and unfeignedly believe? Oh, Mr. Waife! if in earlier days you have sinned, do you not repent? and how often, in many a lovely gentle sentence dropped unawares from your lips, have I had cause to know that yon unfeignedly believe! Were I now clothed with sacred authority, could I not absolve you as a priest? Think you that, in the meanwhile, I dare indge you as a man? I-Life's new recruit, guarded hitherto from temptation by careful parents grey-haired veteran, wearied by the march, wounded in the battle !"

"You are a noble-hearted human being," said Waife, greatly affected. "And-mark my words-a mantle of charity so large you will live to wear as a robe of honour. But hear me, sir! Mr. Hartopp also is a man infinitely charitable, benevolent, kindly, and, through all his simplicity, acutely shrewd; Mr. Hartopp, on hearing what was said against me, deemed me unfit to retain my grandchild, resigned the trust I had confided to him, and would have given me alms, no doubt, had I asked them, but not his hand. Take your hands, sir, from my shoulder, lest the touch sully you."

George did take his hands from the vagrant's shoulder, but it was to grasp the hand that waived them off, and struggled to escape the pressure. "You are innocent, you are innocent! forgive me that I spoke to you of repentance as if you had been guilty. I feel you are innocent-feel it by my own heart. You turn away. I defy you to say that you are guilty of what has been laid to your charge, of what has darkened your good name, of what Mr. Hartopp believed to your prejudice. Look me in the face and say, 'I am not innocent, I have not been belied."

Waife remained voiceless-motionless.

The young man, in whose nature lay yet unproved all those grand qualities of heart, without which never was there a grand orator, a grand preacher - qualities which grasp the results of argument, and arrive at the end of elaborate reasoning by sudden impulse-here released Waife's hand, rose to his feet, and, facing Waife, as the old and favouring fortune-I presume man sate with face averted, eyes loftily-

"Forget that I may soon be the Christian minister whose duty bows his ear to the lips of Shame and Gnilt-whose hand, when it points to Heaven, no mortal touch can sully-whose sublimest post is by the sinner's side. Look on me, but as man and gentleman. See, I now extend this hand to you. If, as man and gentleman, you have done that which, could all hearts be read, all secrets known, human judgment reversed by Divine omniscience, forbids you to take this hand-then reject it-go hence-we part! But, if no such act be on your conscience -however you submit to its impntation-THEN, in the name of Truth. as man and gentleman to man and gentleman, I command you to take this right hand, and in the name of that Honour which bears no paltering, I forbid you to disobey."

The vagabond rose, like the Dead at the spell of a Magician-took, as if irresistibly, the hand held out to him. And the scholar, overjoyed, fell on his breast, embracing him as a son.

"You know," said George, in trembling accents, "that the hand yon have taken will never betraynever desert; but is it-is it really powerless to raise and to restore you to your place ?"

" Powerless amongst your kind for that indeed," answered Waife, in accents still more tremulous. "All the kings of the earth are not strong enough to raise a name that has once been trampled into the mire. Learn that it is not only impossible for me to clear myself, but that it is equally impossible for me to confide to mortal being a single plea in defence if I am innocent, in extenuation if I am guilty. And saying fields, and deemed that only in the this, and entreating you to hold it crowd of a city we could escape more merciful to condemn than to those who pursued us when dis-downcast, breast heaving, said | question me-for question is torture -I cannot reject your pity; but it would be mockery to offer me respect!"

"What! not respect the fortitude which calumny cannot crush? Would that fortitude be possible if you were not calm in the knowledge that no false witnesses can mislead the Eternal Judge? Respect von! yes-because I have seen you happy in despite of men, and therefore I know that the cloud around you is not the frown of heaven."

"Oh," cried Waife, the tears rolling down his cheeks, "and not an hour ago I was jesting at human friendship-venting graceless spleen on my fellow-men! And nownow - Ah, sir! Providence is so kind to me! And," - said he, brushing away his tears, as the old arch smile began to play round the corner of his mouth,-"and kind to me in the very quarter in which unkindness had most sorely smitten me. True, you directed towards me the woman who took from me my grandchild-who destroyed me in the esteem of good Mr. Hartopp. Well, you see, I have my sweet Sophy back again; we are in the home of all others I most longed for; and that woman-yes, I can, at least, thus far, confide to you my secrets, so that you may not blame yourself for sending her to Gatesboro'-that very woman knows of my shelter - furnished me with the very reference necessary to obtain it; has freed my grandchild from a loathsome bondage, which I could not have legally resisted; and should new persecutions chase us. will watch, and warn, and help us. And if you ask me how this change in her was effected - how, when we had abandoned all hope of green myself an adept in disguise, and the child and the dog were never seen out of the four garret walls in which I hid them :- if you ask me. I say, to explain how that very woman was suddenly converted from a remorseless foe into a saving guardian. I can only answer by no wit. no device, no persuasive art of mine. Providence softened her heart, and made it kind, just at a moment when no other agency on earth could have rescued us from from-"

"Say no more-I guess! the paper this woman showed me was a legal form authorising your poor little Sophy to be given up to the care of a father. I guess! of that father you would not speak ill to me; yet from that father you would save your grandchild. Say no more, And you quiet home-your humble employment, really content you!"

"Oh, if such a life can but last! Sophy is so well, so cheerful. so happy. Did not you hear her singing the other day? She never used to sing! But we had not been here a week when song broke out from her, untaught as from a bird. But if any ill report of me travel hither from Gatesboro', or elsewhere, we should be sent away, and the bird would be mute in my thorn tree-Sophy would sing no more."

Do not fear that slander shall drive you hence. Lady Montfort. you know, is my cousin, but you know not-few do-how thoroughly generous and gentle-hearted she is, I will speak of you to her-Oh, do not look alarmed. She will take my word when I tell her, 'that is a good man;' and if she ask more, it will be enough to say, 'those who have known better days are loth to speak to strangers of the past."

"I thank you earnestly, sincerely," covered there, though I fancied | favour more - if you saw in the formal document shown to you, or retain on your memory, the name of -of the person authorised to claim Sophy as his child, you will not mention it to Lady Montfort. I am not sure if ever she heard that name, but she may have done soand-and-" He paused a moment. and seemed to muse; then went on, not concluding his sentence. "You are so good to me. Mr. Morley, that I wish to confide in you as far as I can. Now, you see I am already an old man, and my chief object is to raise up a friend for Sophy when I am gone-a friend in her own sex, sir. Oh, you cannot guess how I long-how I yearn to view that child under the holy fostering eyes of woman. Perhaps if Lady Montfort saw my pretty Sophy, she might take a fancy to her. Oh, if she did -if she did! And Sophy," added Waife, proudly, "has a right to respect. She is not like me-any hovel is good enough for me: But for her! - Do you know that I conceived that hope-that the hope helped to lead me back here-when, months ago, I was at Humberston, intent upon rescuing Sophy; and saw, though," observed Waife, with a sly twitch of the muscles round his mouth, "I had no right at that precise moment to be seeing anything - Lady Montfort's humane fear for a blind old impostor, who was trying to save his dog - a black dog, sir, who had dyed his hair,from her carriage wheels. And the hope became stronger still, when, the first Sunday I attended you village church, I again saw that fair -wondrously fair-face at the far end - fair as moonlight and as melancholy. Strange it is, sir, that I, naturally a boisterous mirthful man, and now a shy, skulking fugitive-feel more attracted, more alsaid Waife, brightening up. "One lured towards a countenance, in hast suffered '-Why is this?"

no God; ' but the fool hath not said she shall see your Sophy."

proportion as I read there the trace in his heart that there is no sorrow" of sadness. I feel less abashed hy - pithy and most profound senmy own nothingness - more em- tence; intimating the irrefragable boldened to approach and say - chain that hinds men to the Father. 'Not so far apart from me, thou too And where the chain tightens, the children are closer drawn together.

GEORGE MORLEY. - "'The fool But to your wish-I will remember hath said in his heart that there is it. And when my cousin returns,

CHAPTER V.

Mr. Waife, being by nature unlucky, considers that, in proportion as Fortune brings him good luck, Nature converts it into bad. He suffers Mr. George Morley to go away in his debt, and Sophy fears that he will be dull in consequence.

GEORGE MORLEY, a few weeks after Comedian did not affect any very the conversation last recorded, took Quixotic notions on that practical his departure from Montfort Court, subject. "To tell you the truth, prepared, without a scruple, to pre- sir, I have rather a superstition sent himself for ordination to the against having more money in my friendly bishop. From Waife he hands than I know what to do with. derived more than the cure of a It has always brought me had luck. disabling infirmity; he received And what is very hard-the had those hints which, to a man who luck stays, but the money goes, has the natural temperament of an There was that splendid sum I orator, so rarely united with that of made at Gateshoro'. You should the scholar, expedite the mastery of have seen me counting it over. I the art that makes the fleeting could not have had a prouder or human voice an abiding, imperish- more swelling heart if I had been able power. The grateful teacher that great man Mr. Elwes the miser. exhausted all his lore upon the And what had luck it hrought me, pupil whose genius he had freed- and how it all frittered itself away ! whose heart had subdued himself. Nothing to show for it but a silk Before leaving, George was much Jadder and an old hurdy-gurdy, and perplexed how to offer to Waife any I sold them at half price. Then other remuneration than that which. in Waife's estimate, had already overpaid all the benefits he had received-viz, unquestioning friendship, and pledged protection. It days the money was all gone!" need scarcely be said that George thought the man to whom he owed half-amused, half-pained - "stolen fortune and happiness was entitled perhaps?" to something beyond that moral re- "Not so," answered Waife, somecompense. But he found, at the what gloomily, "hut restored. A first delicate hint, that Waife would poor dear old man, who thought not hear of money, though the ex- very ill of me-and I don't wonder when I had the accident which cost me this eye, the railway people behaved so generously, gave me £120 -think of that! And before three "How was that?" said George, to great poverty. While I was laid tions. Never speak of me to them, up, my landlady read a newspaper to me, and in that newspaper was an account of his reverse and destitution. But I was accountable to him for the balance of an old debt, and that with the doctor's hills. quite covered my £120. I hope he does not think quite so ill of me now. But the money brought good luck to him, rather than to me. Well, sir, if you were now to give me money, I should be on the lookout for some mournful calamity. Gold is not natural to me. Some day, however, by-and-by, when you are inducted into your living, and have become a renowned preacher. and have plenty to spare, with an idea that you would feel more comfortable in your mind if you had done something royal for the basket-maker, I will ask you to help me to make up a sum, which I am trying by degrees to save-an enormous sum-almost as much as I paid away from my railway compensation-I owe it to the lady who lent it to release Sophy from an engagement which I-certainly without any remorse of conscience-made the child break."

"Oh yes! What is the amount? Let me at least repay that debt."

"Not yet. The lady can waitand she would be pleased to wait, because she deserves to wait - it would be unkind to her to pay it off at once. But, in the meanwhile, if you could send me a few good books for Sophy; - instructive; yet not very, very dry. And a French dictionary-I can teach her French when the winter days close in. You see I am not above being paid, sir, But, Mr. Morley, there is a great favour you can do me."

"What is it? Speak."

at it-was reduced from great wealth | going back to your friends and rela-Never describe me and my odd ways. Name not the lady, nor-nor-nor - the man who claimed Sophy. Your friends might not hurt me, others might. Talk travels. The Hare is not long in its form when it has a friend in a Hound that gives tongue. Promise what I ask. Promise it as 'man and gentleman.'"

"Certainly. Yet I have one relation to whom I should like, with your permission, to speak of you, with whom I could wish you acquainted. He is so thorough a man, of the world that he might suggest some method to clear your good name, which you yourself would approve. My uncle, Colonel Morley-"

"On no account!" cried Waife. almost fiercely, and he evinced so much anger and nneasiness, that it was long before George could pacify him by the most earnest assurances that his secret should be inviolably kept, and his injunctions faithfully obeyed. No men of the world consulted how to force him back to the world of men that he fled from! No colonels to scan him with martinet eyes, and hint how to pipeclay a Waife's apprehensions tarnish! gradually allayed, and his confidence restored, one fine morning George took leave of his eccentric benefactor. Waife and Sophy stood gazing after him from their garden-gate. The cripple leaning lightly on the child's arm. She looked with anxious fondness into the old man's thoughtful face, and clung to him more closely as she looked.

"Will you not be dull, poor grandy ?-will you not miss him ?" "A little at first," said Waife,

"Cautiously refrain from doing rousing himself. "Education is a me a great dis-service! You are great thing. An educated mind, provided that it does us no mischief — "We will, grandy dear," said — which is not always the case—an-Sophy, with decison; and a few not be withdrawn from our exis—inuites afterwards—"If I can be tenow without leaving a blank be—loom every, very cleer, you will not hind. Sophy, we must seriously set pine so much after that gentleman to work and educate ourselvers — "—will you grandy?" — "—will you grandy?"

CHAPTER VI.

Being a chapter that comes to an untimely end.

WINTER was far advanced when it the Vipont interest that the wedded Montfort Court was again bright-pair should reunite at Montfort ende by the presence of its lady. A Court, where all the Vipont family polite letter from Mr. Carr Vipont were invited to witness their felicity had reached her before leaving for mitigate their same.

Window, suggesting how much it and the stage in this history, it becomes a Vipont interest if he would consent just tribute of respect to the great to visit for a month or two the seat in the stage of the long of vipont, to panes and plane neglected, and at which my lord down in fuller display before the rewould join her on his departure verential reader. The House of from his Highland moors. So to Vipont!—what am I about? The Ireland went Lady Montfort. My House of Vipont requires a chapter lord did not join her there; but Mr. Locar Vipont deemed it desirable for

CHAPTER VIL

THE HOUSE OF VIPORT .- " Majora Canamus."

THE House of Vipont! Looking [s] spirit—"Le roi set mort—wise the back through ages, it seems as if the house of Vipont were one continuous living idiosyncraw, having in its progressive development as was no House at all for some generous to the control of the

Henry II.—one of the thousand when she wields a scentre instead fighting men who sailed from Mil- of a broomstick. And, in proof of ford Haven with the stout Earl of its growing importance, the House Pembroke, on that strange expedi- of Vipont marries a daughter of tion which ended in the conquest of the then mighty House of Darrell. Ireland. This gallant man obtained In the reign of Henry V., during large grants of land in that fertile the invasion of France, the House island-some Mao or some O' van- of Vipont - being afraid of the ished, and the House of Vipont dysentery which carried off more rose. During the reign of Richard I, court - contrived to be a minor. the House of Vipont, though re- The Wars of the Roses puzzled the called to England (leaving its Irish House of Vipont sadly, But it went acquisitions in charge of a fierce through that perilous ordeal with cadet, who served as middleman), excused itself from the Crusade, ner in which it changed sides, each and, by marriage with a rich gold- change safe, and most changes lucussmith's daughter, was enabled to tive, is beyond all praise. lend monies to those who indulged in that exciting but costly pilgrim- Yorkists: it was impossible to be age. In the reign of John, the actively Lancasterian, with Henry House of Vipont foreclosed its VI of Lancaster always in prison mortgages on lands thus pledged. and became possessed of a very fair property in England, as well as its Vipont of Vipont, with twenty fiefs in the sister isle.

The House of Vipont took no part in the troublesome politics of London to meet Richmond at Bosthat day. Discreetly obscure, it attended to its own fortunes, and felt | The House of Vipont became again small interest in Magna Charta, intensely Lancasterian, and was During the reigns of the Plantage- amongst the first to crowd round the net Edwards, who were great en- litter in which Henry VII. entered couragers of mercantile adventure, the metropolis. In that reign it the House of Vipont, shunning married a relation of Empson's-did Creci, Bannockburn, and such pro- the great House of Vipont! and as fitless brawls, intermarried with nobles of elder date had become London traders, and got many a scarce and poor, Henry VII. was good thing out of the Genoese. In pleased to make the House of Vithe reign of Henry IV. the House pont an earl-the Earl of Montfort. of Vipont reaped the benefit of its In the reign of Henry VIII., iupast for bearance and modesty. Now, stead of burning Lollards, the for the first time, the Viponts ap- House of Vipont was all for the pear as belted knights-they have Reformation-it obtained the lands armorial bearings-they are Lan- of two priories and one abbercasterian to the backbone-they are Gorged with that spoil, the House exceedingly indignant against here- of Vipont, like an anaconda in the tics-they burn the Lollards-they process of digestion, slept long. But have places in the household of no, it slept not. Though it kept Queen Joan, who was called a witch, itself still as a mouse during the but a witch is a very good friend reign of Bloody Queen Mary (only brave fellows than the field of Aginsingular tact and success. The man-On the whole, it preferred the

And thus, at the death of Edward IV., the House of Vipont was Baron manors. Richard III. counted on the House of Vipont, when he left worth-he counted without his host silently inflating its lungs, and improving its constitution. Slept, indeed! it was wide awake. Then it! was that it began systematically its it sedulously grafting its olive branches on the stems of those fruitful New Houses that had sprung up with the Tudors : then. alive to the spirit of the day, provident of the wants of the morrow, land it wove the interlacing network of useful cousinhood! Then, too, it began to build palaces, to enclose parks-it travelled, too, a little-did Italy-it conceived a taste; a very shook its sagacious head, and went ment favouring a younger son by Protector's family - it was safe Lower. For, thanks to its parlia-II. was restored to England. George III. the House of Vipont During the reign of the merry became a Marquess. From that letting it be known at court that the | was a courtier, married a beauty, House of Vipont had strong papal got the Garter again, and, for leanings); though during the reigns the first time, became the fashion, of Elizabeth and James it made no Fashion began to be a Power. In noise, the House of Vipont was the reign of James II., the House of Vipont again contrived to be a minor, who came of age just in time to take the oaths of fealty to William and Mary. In case of accidents, the grand policy of alliances; then, was House of Vipont kept on friendly terms with the exiled Stuarts, but it wrote no letters, and got into no scrapes. It was not, however, till the Government, under Sir Robert Walpole, established the constitutional and parliamentary system over the length and breadth of the which characterises modern freedom, that the puissance accumulated through successive centuries by the House of Vipont became pre-eminently visible. By that time the House of Vipont! it visited its lands were vast, its wealth enormous; its parliamentary influence, elegant House became the House of as "a Great House," was a part of Vipont! And in James's reign, for the British Constitution. At this the first time, the House of Vipont period, the House of Vipont found got the Garter. The Civil Wars it convenient to rend itself into two broke out - England was rent grand divisions-the peer's branch asunder. Peer and knight took and the commoner's, The House of part with one side or the other. Commons had become so important The House of Vipont was again that it was necessary for the House perplexed. Certainly at the com- of Vipont to be represented there mencement it was all for King by a great commoner. Thus arose Charles. But when King Charles the family of Carr Vipont. That took to fighting the House of Vipont division, owing to a marriage settleabout, like Lord Falkland, sighing the beiress of the Carrs, carried off "Peace, peace!" Finally, it re- a good slice from the estate of the membered its neglected estates in earldom ;-uno averso, non deficit Ireland-its duties called it thither. alter,-the earldom mourned, but To Ireland it went, discreetly sad, replaced the loss by two wealthy and, marrying a kinswoman of Lord | wedlocks of its own; and had long Fauconberg-the connection least since seen cause to rejoice that its exposed to Fortune's caprice of all power in the Upper Chamber was the alliances formed by the Lord strengthened by such aid in the when Cromwell visited Ireland; mentary influence, and the aid of and no less safe when Charles the great commoner, in the reign of monarch, the House of Vipont time to the present day, the House of Vipont had gone on prospering assist the work of civilization by the the same adaptability-and someparty. It may be conceded that the House of Vipont was less brilliant than the Times newspaper, but eloquence and wit, necessary to the duration of a newspaper, were not necessary to that of the House of have had them!

The head of the House of Vipont rarely condescended to take office. With a rent-roll loosely estimated at about £170,000 a-year, it is beneath a man to take from the public a paltry five or six thousand a-year, and unpopular assemblies, and "a ribald press." But it was a matter of course that the Honse of Vipont should be represented in any cabinet that a constitutional monarch could be advised to form. Since the time of Walpole, a Vipont was always in the service of his country, governed. of Lord Steward, Lord Chamberespecial occasions when danger threatened the Star of Brunswick. leave its country in the dark.

and progressive. It was to the aris- law of their existence. They are tocracy what the Times newspaper sure to have a spirited and wealthy is to the press. The same quick tenantry, to whom, if but for the sympathy with public feeling-the sake of that popular character same unity of tone and purpose- which doubles political influence, they are liberal and kindly landthing of the same lofty tone of lords. Under their sway, fens and superiority to the petty interests of sands become fertile - agricultural experiments are tested on a large scale-cattle and sheep improve in breed - national capital augments, and, springing beneath the ploughshare, circulates indirectly to speed the ship and animate the loom. Had Vipont. Had they been so, it would there been no Woburn, no Holkham, no Montfort Court, England would be the poorer by many a million. Our great Houses tend also to the refinement of national taste; they have their show places, their pioturegalleries, their beautiful grounds. The humblest drawing-rooms owe dergo all the undignified abuse of an elegance or comfort—the smallest garden a flower or esculent-to the importations which luxury borrowed from abroad, or the inventions it stimulated at home, for the original benefit of great Honses, Having a fair share of such merits. in common with other great Houses. the House of Vipont was not withexcept in those rare instances when out good qualities peculiar to itself. the country was infamously mis- Precisely because it was the most The cadets of the egotistical of Houses, filled with the House, or the senior member of sense of its own identity, and guided the great commoner's branch of by the instincts of its own conservait, sacrificed their ease to fulfil that tion, it was a very civil, good-natured duty. The Montfort marquesses in House-courteous, generous, hospigeneral were contented with situa- table; a House (I mean the Head tions of honour in the household, as of it, not of conrse all its subordinate members, including even the angust lain, or Master of the Horse, &c .- Lady Selina) that could bow granot onerous dignities; and even these clously and shake hands with you. they only deigned to accept on those Even if you had no vote yourself, you might have a cousin who had a vote. And once admitted into the and the sense of its exalted station family, the House adopted you; forbade the House of Vipont to you had only to marry one of its remotest relations, and the House Great Houses like that of Vipont sent you a wedding present; and at the Established Church, the House of Vipont was that British institution the roots of which were the most widely spread.

Now the Viponts had for long generations been an energetic race. Whatever their defects, they had exhibited shrewdness and vigonr. The late Marquess (grandfather to the present) had been perhaps the ablest-(that is, done most for the House of Vipont)-of them all. Of a grandiose and superb mode of living-of a majestio deportment-of princely manners-of a remarkable talent for the management of all -a perfect enthusiast for the House of Vipont, and aided by a marchioness in all respects worthy of him, he might be said to be the culminating flower of the venerable stem. But the present lord, succeeding to the title as a mere child, was a melancholy contrast, not only to his grandsire, but to the general character of his progenitors. Before his time, every head of the House had done something for it-even the most frivolous had contributed; one had collected the pictures, another He had one susceptibility which is the statues, a third the medals; a fourth had amassed the famous Vipont library; while others had at pique. His amour propre was unleast married heiresses, or augmented, through ducal lines, the do a rash thing, a foolish thing, a splendour of the interminable spiteful thing-pique that, and, procousinhood. The present Marquess was literally wil. The pith of the

every general election, invited you | up; he could not manage his proto rally round your connection-the perty-he could not answer his let-Marquess. Therefore, next only to ters - very few of them could be even read through. Politics did not interest him, nor literature, nor field-sports. He shot, it is true, but mechanically-wondering, perhaps, why he did shoot. He attended races, because the House of Vipont kept a racing-stud. He bet on his own horses, but if they lost showed no vexation. Admirers (no Margness of Montfort could be wholly without them) said, "What fine temper! what good breeding!" it was nothing but constitutional apathy. No one could call him a bad man-he was not a profligate. an oppressor, a miser, a spendthrift; business, whether private or public he would not have taken the trouble to be a bad man on any account. Those who beheld his character at a distance would have called him an exemplary man. The more conspicuous duties of his station, subscriptions, charities, the maintenance of grand establishments, the encouragement of the fine arts, were virtues admirably performed for him by others, But the phlegm or nullity of his being was not, after all, so complete as I have made it, perhaps, appear. more common with women than with men - the susceptibility to forgiving-pique that, and he could digious! the watch went! He had a rooted pique against his marchio-Viponts was not in him. He looked ness. Apparently he had conceived well, he dressed well; if life were this pique from the very first. He only the dumb show of a tableau, showed it passively by supreme he would have been a paragon of a neglect! he showed it actively by Marquess. But he was like the removing her from all the spheres watches we give to little children, of power which naturally fall to the with a pretty gilt dial-plate, and no wife when the husband shuns the works in them. He was thoroughly details of business. Evidently he inert-there was no winding him had a dread lest any one should say, 'Lady Montfort influences my | cousins, against the uniform policy lord." Accordingly, not only the of the House of Vipont, which did management of his estates fell to Carr Vipont, but even of his gardens, his household, his domestic Lady Montfort's conduct in these arrangements. It was Carr Vipont or Lady Selina who said to Lady Montfort, "Give a ball"-"You should ask so and so to dinner "-" Montfort was much hurt to see the old lawn at the Twickenham Villa broken up by those new bosquets. True, it is settled on you as a jointure-house, but for that very reason Montfort is sensitive," &c., &c. In fact, they were virtually as separated, my lord and my lady, as if legally disunited, and as if Carr Vipont and Lady Selina were trustees or intermediaries in any polite approach to each other. But, on the other hand, it is fair to say that where Lady Montfort's sphere of action did not interfere with her husband's plans, habits, likings, dislikings, jealous apprehensions that she should be supposed to have any ascendancy over what exclusively belonged to himself as Roi fainéant of the Viponts, she was left free as air. No attempt at masculine control or conjugal advice. At her disposal was wealth without stintevery luxury the soft could desireevery gewgaw the vain could covet. Had her pin-money, which in itself was the revenue of an ordinary peeress, failed to satisfy her wants -had she grown tired of wearing the family diamonds, and coveted new gems from Golconda-a single word to Carr Vipont or Lady Selina would have been answered by a carte blanche on the Bank of England. But Lady Montfort had the misfortune not to be extravagant in her tastes. Strange to say, in the world Lord Montfort's marriage was called a love match; he had married a portionless girl, daughter all it could for poor cousins except marrying them to its chief. But trying circumstances was admirable and rare. Few affronts can humiliate us unless we resent them-and in vain. Lady Montfort had that exquisite dignity which gives to submission the grace of cheerful acquiescence. That in the gay world flatterers should gather round a young wife so eminently beautiful, and so wholly left by her husband to her own guidance, was inevitable. But at the very first insinuated compliment or pathetio condolence, Lady Montfort, so meek in her household, was haughty enough to have daunted Lovelace. She was thus very early felt to be beyond temptation, and the boldest passed on, nor presumed to tempt. She was unpopular; called "proud and freezing;" she did not extend the influence of "The House:" she did not confirm its fashion-fashion which necessitates social ease, and which no rank, no wealth, no virtue can of themselves suffice to give. And this failure on her part was a great offence in the eyes of the House of Vipont, "She does absolutely nothing for us," said Lady Selina: but Lady Selina in her heart was well pleased that to her in reality thus fell, almost without a rival, the female representation. in the great world, of the Vipont honours. Lady Selina was fashion itself.

Lady Montfort's social peculiarity was in the eagerness with which she sought the society of persons who enjoyed a reputation for superior intellect, whether statesmen, lawyers, authors, philosophers, artists. Intellectual intercourse seemed as if it was her native atto one of his poorest and obscurest mosphere, from which she was habitually banished, to which she returned with an instinctive yearning and a new zest of life; yet was she called, even here, nor seemingly without justice - capricious and unsteady in her likings. These clever personages, after a little while, all seemed to disappoint her expectations of them; she sought the acquaintance of each with cordial earnestness; slid from the acquaintance with weary langour; never, after all, less alone than when alone.

And so wondrous lovely! Nothing so rare as beauty of the high mens of first-rate ideal beauty? the

" Nitor Splendentis Pario marmore purius . . . Et voltus, nimium lubricus adspici."

and which an English poet, with the less sensuous but more spiritual imagination of northern genius, has described in lines that an English reader may be pleased to see rescued from oblivion :-

"Her face was like the milky way i' the A meeting of gentle lights without a name.".

The eyes so purely bright, the exquisite harmony of colouring betype; genius and beauty, indeed, tween the dark (not too dark) hair, are both rare; genius, which is the and the ivory of the skin; such beauty of the mind-beauty, which sweet radiance in the lip when it is the genius of the body. But, of broke into a smile. And it was the two, beauty is the rarer. All of said that in her maiden day, before us can count on our fingers some Caroline Lyndsay became Marforty or fifty persons of undoubted chioness of Montfort, that smile and illustrious genius, including was the most joyous thing imaginthose famous in action, letters, art. able. Absurd now: you would not But can any of us remember to have think it, but that stately lady had seen more than four or five speci- been a wild, fanciful girl, with the merriest laugh and the quickest tear, Whosoever had seen Lady Mont- filling the air round her with April fort would have ranked her amongst sunshine. Certainly, no beings ever such four or five in his recollection. yet lived the life Nature intended There was in her face that lustrous them to live, nor had fair play for dazzle to which the Latin poet, heart and mind, who contrived, by perhaps, refers when he speaks of hook or by crook-to marry the wrong person!

CHAPTER VIII.

The interior of the Great House. The British Constitution at home in a Family Party.

had nothing left to wish for that kings and consinhoods can give, to

GREAT was the family gathering | briefless barristers and aspiring that Christmas-tide at Montfort cornets, of equally good blood with Court. Thither flocked the cousins | the dukes-the superb family united of the House in all degrees and of its motley scions. Such reunions various ranks. From dukes who were frequent, they belonged to the hereditary policy of the House of flection of the palace provided for Vipont. On this occasion the muster of the clan was more significant than usual; there was a "CRISIS" in the constitutional history of the British empire. A new Government had been suddenly formed within the last six weeks, which certainly portended some direful blow on our ancient institutions. for the House of Vipont had not been consulted in its arrangements. and was wholly unrepresented in the Ministry, even by a lordship of the Treasury. Carr Vipont had therefore summoned the patriotic and resentful kindred.

· SECTION.

It is an hour or so after the conclusion of dinner. The gentlemen have joined the ladies in the state suite, a suite which the last Marquess had rearranged and redecorated in his old age-during the long illness that finally conducted him to his ancestors. During his earlier years that princely Marquess had deserted Montfort Court for a seat nearer to London, and therefore much more easily filled with that brilliant society of which he had been long the ornament and centre; railways not then existing for the annihilation of time and space, and a journey to a northern county four days with post-horses, making the invitations even of a Marquess of Montfort unalluring to languid beauties and gouty ministers. But nearing the end of his worldly career, this long neglect of the dwelling identified with his hereditary titles, smote the conscience of the illustrious sinner. And other occupations beginning to pall, his lordship, accompanied and cheered by a chaplain, who had a fine taste in the decorative arts, came resolutely to Montfort Court; and there, surrounded with architects, and in, turned dialogue into monologue. gilders, and upholsterers, redeemed his successor, added to his vaultsa coffin.

The suite expands before the eve. You are in the grand drawing-room, copied from that of Versailles. That is the picture, full length, of the late Marquess in his robes; its pendent is the late Marchioness, his wife. That table of malachite is a present from the Russian Emperor Alexander: that vase of Sevre which rests on it was made for Marie Antoinette-see her portrait enamelled in its centre. Through the open door at the far end your eve loses itself in a vista of other pompous chambers-the music-room, the statue hall, theorangery; other rooms there are appertaining to the suite -a ball-room fit for Babylon, a library that might have adorned Alexandria, but they are not lighted. nor required, on this occasion; it is strictly a family party, sixty guests and no more.

In the drawing-room three whisttables carry off the more elderly and grave. The piano, in the musicroom, attracts a younger group. Lady Selina Vipont's eldest daughter Honoria, a young lady not yet brought. out, but about to be brought out the next season, is threading a wonderfully intricate German piece.-

"Link'd music, long drawn out."

with variations. Her science is consummate. No pains have been spared on her education; elaborately accomplished, she is formed to be the sympathising sponse of a wealthy statesman. Lady Montfort is seated by an elderly duchess, who is goodnatured, and a great talker; near her are seated two middle-aged gentlemen, who had been conversing with her till the duchess, having cut

The elder of these two gentlemen is his errors; and, soothed by the re- Mr. Carr Vipont, bald, with clipped parliamentary whiskers; values him- | painting an amateur, in music a conself on a likeness to Canning, but noisseur; witty at times, and with with a portlier presence-looks a large-acred man. Carr Vipont has about £40,000 a-year; has often reit; is a great authority in committee business and the rules of the House of Commons; speaks very seldom, and at no great length, never arguing, merely stating his opinion, carhe votes, vote fifteen other members of the House of Vipont, besides ad- thoroughbred, that, had you seen miring satellites. He can therefore turn divisions, and has decided the fate of cabinets. A pleasant man, a little consequential, but the reverse of haughty-unctuously overbearing. The other gentleman, to whom he is listening, is our old acquaintance Colonel Alban Vipont Morley -Darrell's friend-George's uncle -a man of importance, not inferior, indeed, to that of his kinsman Carr; an authority in club-rooms, an oracle in drawing-rooms, a first-rate man of the beau monde. Alban Morley, a younger brother, had entered the Guards young; retired, young also, from the Guards with the rank of Colonel, and on receipt of a legacy from an old aunt, which, with the interest derived from the snm at which he sold his commission, allowed him a clear income of £1,000 This modest income sufficed for all his wants, fine gentleman though he was. He had refused to go into Parliament-refused a him an ornament and prop to the high place in a public department. House of Vipont; and with unsus-Single himself, he showed his respect pected depths of intelligence and for wedlock by the interest he took feeling which lay in the lower strata in the marriages of other people. - of his knowledge of this world, to just as Earl Warwick, too wise to witness of some other one, and jusset up for a king, gratified his passion | tified Darrell in commending a boy for royalty by becoming the king- like Lionel Haughton to the Colomaker. The colonel was exceedingly nel's friendly care and admonitory accomplished, a very fair scholar, counsels. The Colonel, like other knew most modern languages. In men, had his weakness, if weakness

wit of a high quality, but thrifty in the expenditure of it; too wise to be known as a wit. Manly too, a darfused office for himself, while taking | ing rider, who had won many a fox's care that other Viponts should have brush: a famous deer-stalker, and one of the few English gentlemen who still keep up the noble art of fencing-twice a-week to be seen. foil in hand, against all comers in Angelo's rooms. Thin, well-shaped, ries great weight with him, and as -not handsome, my dear young lady, far from it, but with an air so him in the day when the opera-house had a crush-room and a fops' alleyseen him in either of those resorts. surrounded by elaborated andies, and showy beauty-men-dandies and beauty-men would have seemed to you second-rate and vulgar; and the eye, fascinated by that quiet formplain in manner, plain in dress, plain in feature-you would have said. "How very distinguished it is to be so plain!" Knowing the great world from the core to the cuticle, and on that knowledge basing authority and position, Colonel Morley was not calculating,-not cunning,-not suspicious. His sagacity the more quick because its movements were straightforward. Intimate with the greatest, but sought, not seeking. Not a flatterer nor a parasite. But when his advice was asked (even if advice necessitated reproof), giving it with military candour. In fine, a man of such social reputation as rendered

House of Vipont was not merely the Corinthian capital, but the embattled keep - not merely the dulce decus, but the præsidium columnque rerum of the British monarchy, He did not boast of his connection with the House; he did not provoke your spleen by enlarging on its manifold virtues: he would often have his harmless jest against its members, or even against its pretensions, but such seeming evidences of forbearance or candour were cunning devices to mitigate envy. His devotion to the House was not obtrusive, it was profound. He loved the House of Vipont for the sake of England, he loved England for the sake of the House of Vipont. Had it been nossible, by some tremendous reversal of the ordinary laws of nature, to dissociate the cause of England from the cause of the House of Vipont. the Colonel would have said, "Save at least the Ark of the Constitution! and rally round the old House!"

The Colonel had none of Guy Darrell's infirmity of family pride; he cared not a rush for mere pedigrees -much too liberal and enlightened for such obsolete prejudices. No! He knew the world too well not to be quite aware that old family and long pedigrees are of no use to a man if he has not some money or some merit. But it was of use to a man to be a cousin of the House of Vipont, though without any money, without any merit at all. It was of use to be part and parcel of a British Institution: it was of use to have a legitimate indefeasible right to share in the administration and patronage of an empire, on which (to use a novel illustration) "the sun never sets." You might want nothing for yourself-the Colonel and the Marquess equally wanted nothing for themselves; but man is not to be a selfish egotist! Man has cousins-his cou-

it can be called: he believed that the sins may want something. Demosthenes denounces, in words that inflame every manly breast, the ancient Greek who does not love his POLIS or State, even though he take nothing from it but barren honour, and contribute towards it-a great many disagreeable taxes. As the Polis to the Greek, was the House of Vipont to Alban Vipont Morley. It was the most beautiful, touching affection imaginable! Whenever the House was in difficulties-whenever it was threatened by a CRISIS—the Colonel was by its side, sparing no pains, neglecting no means, to get the Ark of the Constitution back into smooth water. That duty done, he retired again into private life, and scorned all other reward than the still whisper of applauding conscience.

> "Yes," said Alban Morley, whose voice, though low and subdued in tone, was extremely distinct, with a perfect enunciation, "Yes, it is quite true, my nephew has taken orders -his defect in speech, if not quite removed, has ceased to be any obstacle, even to eloquence; an occasional stammer may be effective-it increases interest, and when the right word comes, there is the charm of surprise in it. I do not doubt that George will be a very distinguished clergyman."

MR. CABB VIPONT .- "We want one-the House wants a very distinguished clergyman; we have none at this moment-not a bishop-not even a dean; all mere parish parsons, and among them not one we could push. Very odd, with more than forty livings too. But the Viponts seldom take to the Church kindly - George must be pushed. The more I think of it, the more we want a bishop: a bishop would be useful in the present CRISIS." (Looking round the rooms proudly. and softening his voice)-" A numerous gathering, Morley! This demonstration will strike terror in | Downing Street - eh! The old House stands firm - never was a Darrell takes up Charlie's sonfamily so united: all here, I think what! as his heir?" -that is, all worth naming - all, except Sir James, whom Montfort ohooses to dislike, and George-and George comes to-morrow."

COLONEL MORLEY .- "You forget the most eminent of all our connections-the one who could indeed I know of." strike terror into Downing Street, were his voice to be heard again!"

CAER VIPONT. - " Whom do you mean? Ah, I know! - Guy Darrell. His wife was a Vipontand he is not here. But he has long since ceased to communicate with any of us-the only connection that ever fell away from the House of Vipont-especially in a CRISIS like the present, Singular man! For all the use he is to us, he might as well be dead! But he has a fine fortune - what will he do with it ? "

THE DUCHESS .- " My dear Lady Montfort, you have hurt yourself with that paper-cutter."

LADY MONTFORT.-" No. indeed. Hush! we are disturbing Mr. Carr Vipont."

The Duchess, in awe of Carr Vipont, sinks her voice, and gabbles on-whisperously.

CARR VIPONT (resuming the subject).- "A very fine fortune-what will he do with it?"

COLONEL MORLEY. - "I don't know, but I had a letter from him some months ago,"

CARR VIPONT .- "You had-and never told me!"

COLONEL MORLEY .- " Of no imoharming young fellow-a kinsman member."

CARR VIPONT .- "Yes, a handsome scamp-went to the dogs. So

COLONEL MOBLEY .- "In his letter to me he anticipated that question in the negative." CARE VIPONT .- "Has Darrell any nearer kinsman?" COLONEL MORLEY .- " Not that

CARE VIPONT .- " Perhaps he will select one of his wife's family for his heir-a Vipont; I should not wonder."

COLONEL MOBLEY (dryly) .- "] should. But why may not Darrell marry again? I always thought he would-I think so still." CARR VIPONT (glancing towards his own daughter Honoria). --"Well, a wife well chosen might restore him to society, and to us, Pity, indeed, that so great an intelleot should be suspended-a voice so eloquent hushed. You are right; in this CRISIS. Guy Darrell once more in the House of Commons, we should have all we require - an orator, a debater! Very odd, but at this moment we have no speakers -WE, the Viponts!"

COLONEL MOBLEY .- "Yourself!" CARE VIPONT. - "You are too kind. I can speak on occasions; but regularly, no. Too much drudgery -not young enough to take to it now. So you think Darrell will marry again? A remarkably finelooking fellow when I last saw him : not old yet; I dare say, well preserved. I wish I had thought of asking him here-Montfort!" (Lord Montfort, with one or two male portance to you, my dear Carr. His friends, was passing by towards a letter merely introduced to me a billiard-room, opening through a side-door from the regular suite)of his own (no Vipont) - Lionel "Montfort! only think we forgot Haughton, son of poor Charlie to invite Guy Darrell. Is it too Haughton, whom you may re- late before our party breaks up?"

LOED MONTFORT (sullenly), -

"I don't choose Guy Darrell to be both know something of his family invited to my house."

Carr Vipont was literally stunned by a reply so contumacious. Lord Montfort demur at what Carr Vipont suggested? He could not believe his senses.

"Not choose, my dear Montfort! you are joking. A monstrous clever fellow, Guy Darrell, and at this CRISIS-"

"I bate clever fellows-no such bores!" said Lord Montfort, breaking from the caressing clasp of Carr Vipont, and stalking away.

Carr," said Colonel Morley. "Darrell is not in England - I rather believe he is in Verona." Therewith the Colonel sauntered towards the group gathered round the piano. A little time afterwards Lady Montfort escaped from the Duchess, and, mingling courteously with her livelier guests, found herself close to Colonel Morley. "Will you give me my revenge at chess?" she defenceasked, with her rare smile. Colonel was charmed. As they sat down and ranged their men, Lady Montfort remarked carelessly-

"I overheard you say you had lately received a letter from Mr. Darrell. Does he write as if wellcheerful? You remember that I was much with his daughter, much in his house, when I was a child. He was ever most kind to me."

Lady Montfort's voice bere faltered. "He writes with no reference to himself, his bealth or his spirits. But his young kinsman described him to me as in good health-wonderfully young-looking for his years. But cheerful-no! Darrell and I entered the world together; we were friends as much as a man so busy and so eminent as he could be introduce him to you?" friends with a man like myself, indolent by habit, and obscure out of after a pause, said, almost rudely, Mayfair. I know his nature; we "No."

sorrows. He cannot be happy ! Impossible !- alone -childless -- secluded. Poor Darrell, abroad now: in Verona, too !- the dullest place ! in mourning still for Romeo and Juliet!-'Tis your turn to move. In his letter Darrell talked of going on to Greece, Asia-penetrating into the depths of Africa - the wildest schemes! Dear County Guy, as we called him at Eton !-what a career his might have been! Don't let us talk of him, it makes me monrnful, Like Goethe, I avoid painful sub-"Spare your regrets, my dear jects upon principle."

LADY MONTFORT, - " No - we will not talk of him. No-I take the Queen's pawn. No. we will not talk of him !-no !"

The game proceeded; the Colonel was within three moves of checkmating his adversary. Forgetting the resolution come to, he said, as she paused, and seemed despondently meditating a hopeless

"Pray, my fair cousin, what makes Montfort dislike my old friend Darrell?"

" Dislike ! Does he! I don't know. Vanguished again, Colonel Morley !" She rose; and, as he restored the chessmen to their box. she leant thoughtfully over the table. "This young kinsman, will he not be a comfort to Mr. Darrell?" "He would be a comfort and a pride to a father; but to Darrell, so distant a kinsman-comfort !-- why and how? Darrell will provide for him, that is all. A very gentlemanlike young man - gone to Paris by my advice-wants polish and knowledge of life. When he comes back he must enter society: I have put his name up at White's: may I

Lady Montfort hesitated, and

She left the Colonel, slightly make a cannon, I suppose!" he said shrugging his shoulders, and passed mutteringly, and turning from her. into the hilliard-room with a quick step. Some ladies were already there, looking at the players. Lord Montfort was chalking his cue. Lady Montfort walked straight up to him; her colour was heightened; her lip was quivering; she placed came still more flushed. She lingered her hand on his shoulder, with a a moment returned to the drawingwife-like boldness. It seemed as if room, and for the rest of the evening she had come there to seek him from was unusually animated, gracious, an impulse of affection. She asked fascinating. As she retired with her with a hurried fluttering kindness of lady guests for the night, she looked voice, "If he had been successful?" round, saw Colonel Morley, and and called him by his Christian held out her hand to him. "Your nance, before merely apathetic, now said she, "my old playfellow; imposassumed an expression of extreme sible quite to forget old friendsdistaste, "Come to teach me to good night," contemplated the balls and missed the cannon. "Rather in my way, Lady Mont-fort," said he then, and retiring to a corner, said no more.

Lady Montfort's countenance be-Lord Montfort's counte- nephew comes here to-morrow."

CHAPTER IX.

"Les extremes se toucheut."

THE next day the gentlemen were | not sometimes very fond mothers The ladies had taken their walk; kind but through policy, artificial as dispersed out of doors -a large and affectionate wives. Lady Selina, shooting party. Those who did not beyond her family circle, was trivial. shoot, walked forth to inspect the unsympathising, cold-hearted, suracing stud or the model farm. percilious by temperament, never some were in their own rooms, some clock-work. But in her own home, in the reception-rooms, at work, or to her husband, her children, Lady reading, or listening to the piano - Selina was a very good sort of Honoria Carr Vipont again per- woman. Devotedly attached to Carr forming, Lady Montfort was absent; Vipont, exaggerating his talents, Lady Selina kindly supplied the thinking him the first man in Enghostess's place. Lady Selina was land, careful of his honour, zealous embroidering, with great skill and for his interests, soothing in his taste, a pair of slippers for her eldest cares, tender in his ailments. To boy, who was just entered at Oxford, her girls prudent and watchful-to having left Eton with a reputation her boys indulgent and caressing. of being the neatest dresser, and not Minutely attentive to the education the worst cricketer, of that renowned of the first, according to her higheducational institute. It is a mis- bred ideas of education-and they take to suppose that fine ladies are really were "superior" girls, with much instruction and well-balanced minds. Less authoritative with the last, because boys being not under her immediate control, her sense of responsibility allowed her to display more fondness and less dignity in her intercourse with them than with young ladies who must learn from her example, as well as her precepts, the patrician decorum which becomes the smooth result of impulse restrained and emotion checked. Boys might make a noise in the world, girls should make none. Lady Selina, then, was working the slippers for her absent son, her heart being full of him at that moment. She was describing his character, and expatiating on his promise to two or three attentive listeners, all interested, as being themselves of the Vipont blood, in the probable destiny of the heir to the Carr Viponts.

"In short," said Lady Selina, winding up, "as soon as Reginald is of age we shall get him into Parliament. Carr has always lamented that he himself was not broken into office early; Reginald must be. Nothing so requisite for public men as early training-makes them practical, and not too sensitive to what those horrid newspaper men say. That was Pitt's great advantage. Reginald has ambition: he should have occupation to keep him out of mischief. It is an anxious thing for a mother, when a son is good-looking-such danger of his being spoiled by the women .- Yes, my dear, it is a small foot, very small-his father's foot."

"If Lord Montfort should have no family," said a somewhat distant and subaltern Vipont, whisperingly and hesitating, "does not the title-"

" No, my dear," interrupted Lady but the marquessate, in that case, is extinct. No other heir-male from Gilbert, the first Marquess. Carr says there is even likely to be some dispute about the earldom. The Barony, of course, is safe; goes with the Irish estates, and most of the English: and goes (don't you know?)-to Sir James Vipont, the last person who ought to have it: the quietest, stupidest creature; not brought up to the sort of thing-a mere gentleman farmer on a small estate in Devonshire."

"He is not here?" "No. Lord Montfort does not like him. Very natural. Nobody does like his heir, if not his own child, and some people don't even like their own eldest sons! shocking; but so it is. Montfort is the kindest, most tractable being that ever was, except where he takes a dislike. He dislikes two or three people very much."

"True; how he did dislike poor Mrs. Lyndsay!" said one of the listeners, smiling.

"Mrs. Lyndsay, yes-dear Lady Montfort's mother. I can't say I pitied her, though I was sorry for Lady Montfort. How Mrs. Lyndsay ever took in Montfort for Caroline I can't conceive! How she had the face to think of it! He, a mere youth at the time! Kept secret from all his family-even from his grandmother—the darkest transaction. I don't wonder that he never forgave it."

FIRST LISTENER .- " Caroline has beauty enough to-"

LADY SELINA (interrupting) .-"Beauty, of course-no one can deny that. But not at all suited to such a position, not brought up to the sort of thing. Poor Montfort! he should have married a different kind of woman altogether-a woman Selina; "no the title does not come like his grandmother, the last Lady to us. It is a melancholy thought, Montfort. Caroline does nothing for the House - nothing - has not | took it up. I believe it did not even a child-most unfortunate come on in the courts in which affair." SECOND LISTENER. - "Mrs. Lyndsay was very poor, was not she? Caroline, I suppose, had no opportunity of forming those tastes and habits which are necessary forfor-" LADY SELINA (helping the listener) .- "For such a position and such a fortune. You are quite right, my dear. People brought up in one way, cannot accommodate themselves to another; and it is odd, but I have observed that people brought up poor can accommodate themselves less to being very rich than people brought up rich to accommodate themselves to being very poor. As Carr says, in his pointed way, 'it is easier to stoop than to climb.' Yes; Mrs. Lyndsay was, you know, a daughter of Seymour Vipont, who was for so many years in the Administration. with a fair income from his salary, and nothing out of it. She married one of the Scotch Lyndsays-good family, of course-with a very moderate property. She was left a widow young, with an only child, Caroline. Came to town with a small jointure. The late Lady Montfort was very kind to her. So were we all - took her up - pretty woman-pretty manners-worldly -oh, very !- I don't like worldly people. Well, but all of a sudden, a dreadful thing happened. The heir-at-law disputed the jointure, denied that Lyndsay had any right to make settlements on the Scotch property -- very complicated business. But, luckily for her, Vipont Crooke's daughter, her cousin and intimate friend, had married Darrell-the famous Darrell-who was small sitting-room, writing lettersthen at the bar. It is very useful to letters that Carr Vipont had entreat-

Darrell practised. But he arranged all the evidence, inspected the briefs. spent a great deal of his own money in getting up the case-and, in fact, he gained her cause though he could not be her counsel. People did say that she was so grateful that after his wife's death she had set her heart on becoming Mrs. Darrell the second. But Darrell was then quite wrapt up in politics-the last man to fall in love-and only looked bored when women fell in love with him, which a good many did. Grandlooking creature, my dear, and quite the rage for a year or two. However, Mrs. Lyndsay all of a sudden went off to Paris, and there Montfort saw Caroline, and was caught, Mrs. Lyndsay, no doubt, calculated on living with her daughter, having the run of Montfort House in town and Montfort Court in the country. But Montfort is deeper than people think for. No, he never forgave her. She was never asked heretook it to heart, went to Rome, and died."

At this moment the door opened, and George Morley, now the Rev. George Morley, entered, just arrived to join his cousins.

Some knew him, some did not, Lady Selina, who made it a point to know all the cousins, rose graciously, put aside the slippers, and gave him two fingers. She was astonished to find him not nearly so shy as he used to be-wonderfully improved; at his ease, cheerful, animated. The man now was in his right place, and following hope on the bent of inclination. Few men are shy when in their right places. He asked after Lady Montfort. She was in her own have cousins married to clever peo- ed her to write-correspondence useple. He was interested in her case, ful to the House of Vipont. Before long, however, a servant entered, to | that unpretending sitting-room, with say that Lady Montfort would be its simple chintzes and quiet bookvery happy to see Mr. Morley, shelves-room that would not have George followed the servant into been too fine for a cottage.

CHAPTER X.

In every life, go it fast, go it slow, there are critical pausing-places. When the journey is renewed the face of the country is changed.

room-herself so simply dressedher marvellous beauty so exquisitely subdued. She looked at home there, as if all of home that the house could give were there collected.

She had finished and sealed the momentous letters, and had come, with a sense of relief, from the table at the farther end of the room, on which those letters, ceremonious and conventional, had been written -come to the window, which, though mid-winter, was open, and the redbreast, with whom she had made friends, hopped boldly almost within reach, looking at her with if you will promise to keep it." bright eyes, and head ouriously aslant. By the window a single chair, and a small reading-desk, with the book lying open. The short day was not far from its close, but there was ample light still in the skies, and a serene if chilly stillness in the air without.

Though expecting the relation she had just summoned to her presence, I fear she had half forgotten him. She was standing by the window deep in reverie as he entered, so deep that she started when his voice struck her ear and he stood before her. She recovered herself quickly, than her ordinary kindliness of tone "That I already comprehend."

How well she suited that simple and manner towards the scholar-"I am so glad to see and congratulate you."

> "And I so glad to receive your congratulations," answered the scholar, in smooth, slow voice, without a stutter.

"But, George, how is this?" asked Lady Montfort, "Bring that chair. sit down here, and tell me all about it. You wrote me word you were cured, at least sufficiently to remove your noble scruples. You did not say how. Your uncle tells me, by patient will, and resolute practice.23 "Under good guidance, But I am going to confide to you a secret,

"Oh, you may trust me; I have no female friends."

The clergyman smiled, and spoke at once of the lessons he had received from the basket-maker.

"I have his permission," he said in conclusion, "to confide the service he rendered me, the intimacy that has sprung up between us, but to you alone-not a word to your guests. When you have once seen him, you will understand why an eccentric man, who has known better days, would shrink from the impertinent curiosity of idle customers. Contented with his humble livilihowever, and said with even more hood, he asks but liberty and repose."

cottage."

"Nay, my dear Lady Montfort, that would be to refuse the favour I am about to ask, which is that you would come with me to that very cottage. It would so please him."

" Please him-why?"

"Because this poor man has a cottage. young female grandchild, and he is be kind to her, and because, too, he seems most anxious to remain in his present residence. The cottage, of course, belongs to Lord Montfort, and is let to him by the bailiff, and if you deign to feel interest in him, his tenure is safe."

Lady Montfort looked down, and coloured. She thought, perhaps, liards in the dreary intervals beand bed-time.

said Lady Montfort, half sighing, George Morley and his fair cousin half smiling. "But my curiosity walked boldly en evidence, before the shall not molest him, and when I prying ghostly windows, across the visit the village, I will pass by his broad gravel walks-gained the seoluded shrubbery, the solitary deeps of parkland-skirted the wide sheet of water-and passing through a private wicket in the paling suddenly came upon the patch of osierground and humble garden, which were backed by the basket-maker's

As they entered those lowly preso anxious that you should see and cinots a child's laugh was borne to their ears-a child's silvery, musical, mirthful laugh; it was long since the great lady had heard a laugh like that-a happy child's natural laugh. She paused and listened with a strange pleasure. "Yes," whispered George Morley, "stop-and hush! there they are."

Waife was seated on the stnmp of how false a security her protection, a tree, materials for his handicraft and how slight an influence her lying beside neglected. Sophy was interest would be, but she did not standing before him-he, raising his say so. George went on; and so finger as in reproof, and striving eloquently and so touchingly did he hard to frown. As the intruders describe both grandsire and grand- listened, they overheard that he was child, so skilfully did he intimate striving to teach her the rudiments the mystery which hung over them, of French dialogue, and she was that Lady Montfort became much laughing merrily at her own blunmoved by his narrative, and willingly ders, and at the solemn affectation promised to accompany him across of the shocked schoolmaster. Lady the park to the basket-maker's cot- Montfort noted with no unnatural tage the first opportunity. But surprise the purity of idiom and of when one has sixty guests in one's accent with which this singular bashouse, one has to wait for an oppor- ket-maker was unconsciously distunity to escape from them unre- playing his perfect knowledge of a marked. And the opportunity, in language which the best-educated fact, did not come for many days- English gentleman of that generanot till the party broke up-save tion, nay, even of this, rarely speaks one or two dowager she-cousins who with accuracy and elegance. But "gave no trouble," and one or two her attention was diverted immedibachelor he-cousins whom my lord ately from the teacher to the face retained to consummate the slaugh- of the sweet pupil. Women have a ter of pheasants, and play at bil- quick appreciation of beauty in their own sex-and women, who are themtween sunset and dinner-dinner selves beautiful, not the least. Irresistibly Lady Montfort felt attracted Then one cheerful frosty noon towards that innocent countenance proached. Here slowly, lingeringly, let fall the curtain. In the frank license of narrative, years will have rolled away ere the curtain rise again. Events that may influence a life often date from moments the most serene, from things that appear as trivial and unnoticeable as the great lady's visit to the basket-maker's cottage. Which of those lives will that visit influence hereafter-the woman's, the child's, the vagrant's? Whose? Probably little that passes now would aid conjecture, or be a visible link in the chain of destiny. A few desultory questions-a few guarded answers-a look or so, a musical syllable or two exchanged between the lady and the child-a basket bought, or a promise to call again. Nothing worth the telling. Be it then untold. View only the scene itself as the curtain drops reluctantly. The rustic cottage, its garden-door open, and open its oldfashioned lattice casements. You can see how nest and cleanly, how eloquent of healthful poverty, how remote from squalid penury, the whitewashed walls, the homely furniture within. Creepers lately trained around the doorway. Christmas holly, with berries red against the window-panes; the bee-hive yonder; a starling, too, outside the threshold, in its wicker cage. In the background (all the rest of the neighbouring hamlet out of sight), the church spire tapering away into so lively in its mirth, and yet so | Presence-which, amidst solitude, softly gay. Sir Isaac, who had murmurs "not solitary;" a Prehitherto lain perdu, watching the sence unvouchsafed to the great movements of a thrush amidst a lady in the palace she has left. And holly-bush, now started up with a the lady herself? She is resting on bark. Waife rose - Sophy turned the rude gnarled root-stump from half in flight. The visitors ap- which the vagrant had risen; she has drawn Sophy towards her; she has taken the child's hand she is speaking now-now listening; and on her face kindness looks like happiness. Perhaps she is happy at that moment. And Waife? he is turning aside his weatherbesten mobile countenance, with his hand anxiously trembling upon the young scholar's arm. The scholar whispers, "Are you satisfied with me?" and Waife answers in a voice as low, but more broken, "God reward you! Oh, joy !-- if my pretty one has found at last a woman friend!" Poor vagabond, he has now a calm asylum-a fixed humble livelihood -more than that, he has just achieved an object fondly cherished His past life-alas! what has he done with it? His actual lifebroken fragment though it be-is at rest now. But still the everlasting question - mocking, terrible question-with its phrasing of farm and its enigmas of tragical sense-"WHAT WILL HE DO WITH IT?" Do with what? The all that remains to him-the all he holds !the all which man himself, betwirt Free-will and Pre-decree, is permitted to do. Ask not the vagrant alone-ask each of the four there assembled on that flying bridge called the Moment. Time before theewhat wilt thou do with it? Ask thyself !- ask the wisest ! Out of effort to answer that question, what dream-schools have risen, never wholly to perish! The science of the clear blue wintry sky. All has seers on the Chaldee's Pur-Tor. or an air of repose-of safety. Close in the rock-caves of Delphi, gasped beside you is the Presence of Home after and grasped at by horn-handed -that ineffable, sheltering, loving mechanics to-day in their lanes and alleys. To the heart of the populace; secred learning, and august ambisink down the blurred relies of what time; fancies of dawning reason;—once was the law of the secretest hopes of intellect matured;—meages—hieroglyphical tatters which mories of existence wrecked; house-terpret.—"WHAT WIL IR DO and epio in low, close, human sight with IT?" Ask Marle and his to which Potty never yet gas voice; Crystal; But the ourtain descends!—all for the moment personified Yet a moment, three they are—age there before you—a glimps for the and childhood—poverty, wealth, guess—no more Lower and lower station, vagabondage; the prescher's falls the curtain I. All is blank!

BOOK VI.-CHAPTER I.

Etchings of Hyde Park in the month of June, which, if this History escape those villains the trunk-makers, may be of inestimable value to unborn autiquarians.-Characters, long absent, reappear and give some account of themselves.

this history opened. It is the month of June, once more-June, which clothes our London in all its glory: fills its languid ball-rooms with living flowers, and its stony cansewave with human butterflies. It is from his duties" becomes the adeabout the hour of 6 P.M. The lounge in Hyde Park is crowded; along the road that skirts the Serpentine crawl the carriages one after the other: congregate by the rails the lazy lookers-on-lazy in attitude, but with active eyes, and tongues sharpened on the whetstone of scandal; There, you might see the Ladies the Scaligers of Club-windows airing their vocabulary in the Park. Slowly saunter on, foot-idlers of all degrees in the hierarchy of London idlesse; dandies of established fame -youthful tyros in their first season. Yonder in the Ride, forms less inanimate seem condemned to active exercise; young ladies doing penance in a canter ; old beaux at hard labour in a trot. Sometimes by a more thoughtful brow, a still brisker pace, you recognise a busy member of the Imperial Parliament, who, artfully entrapped into "honourable advised by physicians to be as much intentions." They coquet majestion horseback as possible, snatches cally, but they never flirt; they an hour or so in the interval between exact devotion, but they do not ask the close of his Committee and the in each victim a sacrifice on the interest of the Debate, and shirks horns of the altar; they will never

FIVE years have passed away since the opening speech of a well-known bore. Among such truant lawgivers (grief it is to say it) may be seen that once model member. Sir Gregory Stollhead, Grim dyspepsia seizing on him at last, "relaxation quate punishment for all his sins, Solitary he rides, and, communing with himself, yawns at every second. Upon chairs, beneficently located under the trees towards the north side of the walk, are interspersed small knots and coteries in repose. Prymme, still the Ladies Prymme -Janet and Wilhelmina; Janet has grown fat. Wilhelmina thin. But thin or fat, they are no less Prymmes. They do not lack male attendants: they are girls of high fashion, with whom young men think it a distinction to be seen talking; of high principle, too, and high pretensions (unhappily for themselves, they are co-heiresses), by whom young men under the rank of earls need not fear to be give their hands where they do not decoys me with the promise of a give their hearts; and being ever dinner at Putney-room looking on afraid that they are courted for the river, and fried flounders. I their money, they will never give have the credulity to yield: I detheir hearts save to wooers who range my habits-I leave my cool have much more money than them- studio; I put off my easy blouse; I do passing homage to the Ladies cravat invented by the Thugs; the Prymme; some linger to converse dog-days are at hand, and I walk -safe young men, they are all rashly over scorching pavements in younger sons. Farther on, Lady a black frock-coat and a brimless Frost and Mr. Crampe the wit, sit hat; I annihilate 3s. 6d. in a pair of amicably side by side, pecking at kid gloves; I arrive at this haunt of each other with sarcastic beaks; spleen; I run the gauntlet of Frosts. occasionally desisting, in order to Slowes, and Prymmes; - and my fasten nip and claw upon that com- traitor fails me! Half-past six-not mon enemy, the passing friend! a sign of him! and the dinner at The Slowes, a numerous family, but Putney-fried flounders? Dreams! taciturn, sit by themselves-bowed Patience, five minutes more; if then to much: accosted rarely.

somewhere about thirty, or a year there he comes, the laggard! But or two more, who, recognised by how those fine folks are catching at most of the loungers, seems not at him! Has he asked them also to home in the lounge. He has passed dinner at Putney, and do they care by the various coteries just described, for fried flounders?"

made his obeisance to the Ladies Prymme, received an icy epigram man, much younger than himself, from Lady Frost, and a laconic sneer from Mr. Crampe, and exchanged silent bows with seven silent Slowes. He has wandered on, looking high in the air, but still shake of the hand. Evidently he looking for some one, not in the air; and evidently disappointed in his search, comes to a full stop at length, takes off his hat, wipes bis brow, utters a petulant "Prr-rpshw!" and seeing a little in the smile! . Powers above! back-ground, the chairless shade of Wilbelmina surely blushes as she a thin emaciated, dusty tree, thither he retires, and seats himself with as Lady Frost unblighted; the Slowes little care whether there to seat himself be the right thing in the Slowes, as he shoots by them with right place, as if in the honeysuckle that sliding bow. He looks from arbour of a village inn. "It serves side to side, with a rapid glance of me right," said he to himself: "a an eve in which light seems all precocious villain bursts in upon dance and sparkle; he sees the solime, breaks my day, makes an ap- loquist under the meagre tree-the pointment to meet here, in these pace quickens, the lips part, half very walks, ten minutes before six; laughing.

Many young men stop to imprison my freeborn throat in a he comes not-breach for life be-Note that man of good presence, tween him and me! Ah, voilà!

The soliloquist's eye is on a young who is threading the motley crowd with a light quick step, but is compelled to stop at each moment to interchange a word of welcome, a has already a large acquaintance; evidently he is popular, on good terms with the world and himself. What free grace in his bearing! what gay good-humour in his returns his bow. He has passed evince emotion, at least the female

"Don't scold, Vance. I am late, | Nothing so good as flounders. Ho! I know; hut I did not make allowance for interceptions,"

"Body o' me, interceptions! For an absentee just arrived in London, you seem to have no lack of friends."

"Friends made in Paris, and found again here at every corner, like pleasant surprises. But no friend so welcome, and dear, as Frank Vance."

"Sensible of the honour, O Lionello the magnificent, Verily you are bon Prince! The Houses of Valois and of Medici were always kind to artists. But whither would you lead me? Back into that treadmill? Thank you, humbly; no. A crowd in fine clothes is of all mobs the dullest. I can look undismayed on the many-headed monster, wild and rampant; but when the many-headed monster huvs its hats in Bond Street, and has an eye-glass at each of its inquisitive eves. I confess I take fright. Besides, it is near seven o'clock; Putney not visible, and the flounders not fried!"

" My cab is waiting yonder; we must walk to it-we can keep on the turf, and avoid the throng. But tell me honestly, Vance, do you really dislike to mix in crowdsyou, with your fame, dislike the eyes that turn back to look again, and the lips that respectfully murmur, 'Vance the Painter?' Ah, I always said you would be a great painter. And in five short years you have soared high."

" Pooh!" answered Vance, indif-"Nothing is pure and unadulterated in London use; not cream, nor cayenne pepper-least of all Fame :- mixed up with the most deleterious ingredients. Fame! did von read the Times' critique on my pictures in the present Exhibition? Fame indeed! Change the subject. | bullet, the roar of the ball; it plants is that your cab? Superb! Car fit for the 'Grecian youth of talents rare,' in Mr. Enfield's Speaker :horse that seems conjured out of the Elgin Marhles. Is he quiet?"

"Not very ; but trust to my driving. You may well admire the horse-present from Darrell, chosen by Colonel Morley."

When the young men had settled themselves in the vehicle. Lionel dismissed his groom, and, touching his horse, the animal trotted out

"Frank," said Lionel, shaking his dark ourls with a petulant gravity, "Your cynical definitions are unworthy that masculine heard. You despise fame! what sheer affectation!

'Pulverem Olympicum Collegisse juvat ; metaque fervidis Evitata rotis -----

"Take care," cried Vance: we shall be over." For Lionel, growing excited, teased the horse with his whip; and the horse bolting, took the cah within an inch of a watercart.

"Fame, fame!" cried Lionel, unheeding the interruption. "What would I not give to have and to hold it for an hour ?"

"Hold an eel, less slippery; a scorpion, less stinging! Butadded Vance, observing his companion's heightened colour .- "But." he added, seriously, and with an honest compunction, "I forgot, you are a soldier, you follow the career of arms! Never heed what is said on the subject by a querulous painter! The desire of fame may be folly in civilians, in soldiers it is wisdom. Twin-born with the martial sense of honour, it cheers the march, it warms the bivouac; it gives music to the whirr of the rivals with the bond of brothers; treat!" comforts the survivor when the brother falls: takes from war its grim aspect of carnage; and from homicide itself extracts lessons that strengthen the safeguards to humanity, and perpetuate life to Right-pant for fame;

you are a soldier !"

nations.

This was one of those bursts of high sentiment from Vance, which, as they were very rare with him. had the dramatic effect of surprise. Lionel listened to him with a thrilling delight. He could not answer, he was too moved. The artist resumed, as the cabriolet now cleared the Park, and rolled safely and rapidly along the road. "I suppose, during the five years you have spent abroad, completing your general education, you have made little study, or none, of what specially appertains to the profession you have so recently chosen."

"You are mistaken there, my dear Vance. If a man's heart be set on a thing, he is always studying The books I loved best, and most pondered over, were such as, if they did not administer lessons, suggested hints that might turn to lessons hereafter. In social intercourse, I never was so pleased as when I could fasten myself to some practical veteran - question and cross-examine him. One picks up more ideas in conversation than from books; at least I do. Besides. my idea of a soldier who is to succeed some day, is not that of a mere mechanician at-arms. See how accomplished most great captains have been. What observers of mankind !-- What diplomatists-what reasoners! what men of action, because men to whom reflection had been habitual before they acted! How many stores of idea must have gone to the judgment which hazards derstand in him much that per-hope in the thick of peril; knits | the sortic, or decides on the re-

"Gently, gently!" oried Vance. "We shall be into that omnibus! Give me the whip-do; there-a little more to the left-so. Yes; I am glad to see such enthusiasm in your profession-'tis half the battle. Hazlitt said a capital thing, 'The prentice who does not consider the Lord Mayor in his gilt coach the greatest man in the world, will live to be hanged!""

" Pish!" said Lionel, catching at the whip.

VANCE (holding it back) .- " No. I apologise. I retract the Lord Mayor; comparisons are odious. I agree with you, nothing like leather. I mean nothing like a really great soldier-Hannibal, and so forth. Cherish that conviction, my friend; meanwhile, respect human lifethere is another omnibus!"

The danger past, the artist thought it prudent to divert the conversation into some channel less. exciting.

"Mr. Darrell, of course, consents to your choice of a profession?"

"Consents-approves, encourages. Wrote me such a beautiful letterwhat a comprehensive intelligence that man has !"

"Necessarily; since he agrees with you. Where is he now?"

"I have no notion: it is some months since I heard from him. He was then at Malta, on his return from Asia Minor."

"So! you have never seen him since he bade you farewell at his old Manor-House?"

"Never. He has not, I believe, been in England."

"Nor in Paris, where you seem to have chiefly resided?"

"Nor in Paris. Ah. Vance, could I but be of some comfort to him. Now that I am older, I think I unplexed me as a boy, when we parted, | ment from him, he was still in Par-Darrell is one of those men who liament, and in full activity of require a home. Between the great career. But certainly he did not world and solitude, he needs the long keep it up. It might have been intermediate filling-up which the life domestio alone supplies: a wife to realise the sweet word helpmate -children, with whose future he could knit his own toils and his ancestral remembrances. That intermediate space annihilated, the great world and the solitude are left, each frowning on the other."

"My dear Lionel, you must have lived with very clever people; you are talking far above your years."

"Am I? True, I have lived, if the sake of an heir." not with very clever people, with people far above my years. That is a secret I learned from Colonel Morley, to whom I must present you-the subtlest intellect under the quietest manner. Once he said to me, 'Would you throughout life be up to the height of your century -always in the prime of man's reason-without crudeness and without decline - live habitually, while young, with | persons older, and, when old, with persons younger, than yourself."

"Shrewdly said indeed. I felicitate you on the evident result of the maxim. And so Darrell has no home-no wife, and no children?"

"He has long been a widower; he lost his only son in boyhood. and his daughter-did you never hear?"

" No-what-?"-

"Married so ill-a runaway match -and died many years since, without issue." "Poor man! It was these afflictions, then, that soured his life, and made him the hermit or the wanderer?"

an effort to which, strong as he is, he felt himself unequal; or, might he have known some fresh disappointment, some new sorrow, which the world never guesses? what I have said as to his family afflictions. the world knows. But I think he will marry again. That idea seemed strong in his own mind when we parted; he brought it out bluntly. roughly. Colonel Morley is convinced that he will marry, if hut for

VANCE .- " And if so, my poor Lionel, you are ousted of-"

LIONEL (quickly interrupting),-"Hush l Do not say, my dear Vance, do not you say-you!-one of those low mean things which, if said to me even by men for whom I have no esteem, make my ears tingle and my cheek blush. When I think of what Darrell has already done for me-me who have no claim on him-it seems to me as if I must hate the man who insinuates, 'Fear lest your benefactor find a smile at his own hearth, a child of his own blood-for you may be richer at his death in proportion as his life is desolate."

VANCE.- "You are a fine young fellow, and I beg your pardon. Take care of that milestone-thank you. But I suspect that at least two-thirds of those friendly hands that detained you on the way to me, were stretched out less to Lionel Haughton - a suhaltern in the Guards-than to Mr. Darrell's heirpresumptive." LIONEL .- "That thought sometimes galls me, hut it does me good; "There," said Lionel, "I am for it goads on my desire to make puzzled; for I find that even after myself some one whom the most his son's death, and his daughter's worldly would not disdain to know unhappy marriage and estrange- for his own sake. Oh for active service !- Oh for a sharp campaign ! | certainly if I have made my way to Oh for fair trial how far a man in some small reputation, patience, earnest can grapple Fortune to his breast with his own strong hands ! You have done so, Vance; you had prudence, too, which you have forbut your genius and your painter's brush. I have no genius, but I have resolve, and resolve is perhaps as sure of its ends as genius. Genius and Resolve have three grand elements in common-Patience, Hope, Concentration."

Vance, more and more surprised, looked hard at Lionel, without speaking. Five years of that oritical age, from seventeen to twenty-two, spent in the great capital of Europe -kept from its more dangerous vices partly by a proud sense of personal dignity, partly by a temperament which, regarding love as an ideal for all tender and sublime emotion, recoiled from low pro- some comments on economy which fligacy as being to Love what the Yahoo of the mocking satirist was to Man - absorbed much by the brooding ambition that takes youth out of the frivolous present into the serious future, and seeking companionship, not with contemporary idlers, but with the highest and maturest intellects that the free commonwealth of good society brought within his reach - Five years so spent had developed a boy, nursing noble dreams, into a man lessons for finished disciples in the fit for noble action - retaining sacred walks of the Queen's Bench. freshest youth in its enthusiasm, its elevation of sentiment, its daring, its energy, and divine credulity in its own unexhausted resources: but borrowing from maturity compactness and solidity of idea-the link between speculation and practicethe power to impress on others a sense of the superiority which has been self-elaborated by unconscious culture.

"So!" said Vance, after a prolonged pause, "I don't know whehope, and concentration of purpose must have the credit of it: and gotten to name, and certainly don't evince as a charioteer. I hope, my dear fellow, you are not extravagant? No debts, eh?-why do you laugh?"

"The question is so like you.

Frank-thrifty as ever."

"Do you think I could have painted with a calm mind, if I knew that at my door there was a dun whom I could not pay? Art needs serenity; and if an artist begin his career with as few shirts to his back as I had, he must place economy amongst the rules of perspective."

Lionel laughed again, and made were certainly, if smart, rather flippant, and tended not only to lower the favourable estimate of his intellectual improvement which Vance had just formed, but seriously disquieted the kindly artist. knew the world-knew the peculiar temptations to which a young man in Lionel's position would be exposed - knew that contempt for economy belongs to that school of Peripatetics which reserves its last

However, that was no auspicious moment for didactic warnings.

"Here we are!" cried Lionel-" Putney Bridge."

They reached the little inn by the river-side, and while dinner was getting ready, they hired a boat, Vance took the oars.

VANCE .- " Not so pretty here as by those green quiet banks along which we glided, at moonlight, fivo years ago."

LIONEL,-"Ah. no. And that ther I have resolve or genius; but innocent, charming child, whose portrait you took-you have never I have led that child through ail heard of her since ?"

VANCE .- "Never! How should I! Have you?"

repeated to me. His lawyer had the Times' critic allows that! 'Mr. ascertained that she and her grand- Vance, there, is inimitable! a type father had gone to America. Dar- of childlike grace peculiarly his rell gently implied, that from what own,' &c., &c. I'll lend you the he learned of them, they scarcely article." merited the interest I felt in their fate. But we were not deceived- again see the original darling were we. Vance?"

VANCE .- " No: the little girlwhat was her name? Sukey? Sally ?-Sophy-true, Sophy-had my wife must have Sophy's eyes! something about her extremely In America!" prepossessing, besides her pretty face; and, in spite of that horrid it."

LIONEL.-"Her face! Nor I. I see it still before me!"

VANCE .- " Her cotton print! I see it still before me | But I must not be ungrateful. Would you believe it, that little portrait, which cost me three pounds, has made, I don't say my fortune, but my fashion?"

heart to sell it?"

Sabrina Fair,' in Milton's Comus. the double in the famous line - history, sacred and profane. I have painted her in all costumes (her own cotton print excepted). My LIONEL .- "Only what Darrell female heads are my glory-even LIONEL .- "And shall we never Sophy? You will laugh, Vance, but I have been heart-proof against all young ladies. If ever I marry, VANCE.-Let us hope by this time happily married to a Yankee! cotton print, I shall never forget Yankees marry girls in their teens, and don't ask for dowries. Married to a Yankee! not a doubt of it! a Yankee who chaws, whittles, and keeps a 'store!'"

LIONEL .- " Monster! Hold your tongue. Apropos of marriage, why are you still single?"

VANCE .- "Because I have no wish to be doubled up! Moreover, man is like a napkin, the more LIONEL .- "How! You had the neatly the housewife doubles him, the more carefully she lays him on VANCE .- "No: I kept it as a the shelf. Neither can a man once study for young female heads— doubled know how often he may be 'with variations,' as they say in doubled. Not only his wife folds music. It was by my female heads him in two, but every child quarters that I became the fashion; every him into a new double, till what order I have contains the condition was a wide and handsome substance. - But be sure, one of your sweet large enough for anything in reason. female heads, Mr. Vance.' My dwindles into a pitiful square that female heads are as necessary to my will not cover one platter - all canvass as a white horse to Wou-vermans'. Well, that child, who smaller with every double — with cost me three pounds, is the original every double a new crease. Then. of them all. Commencing as a my friend, comes the washing-bill! Titania, she has been in turns a and, besides all the hurts one rc-'Psyche,' a 'Beatrice Cenci,' a ceives in the mangle, consider the 'Minna,' 'A Portrait of a Noble-man's Daughter,' 'Burns's Mary in press! In short, Shakespeare vin-Heaven,' 'The Young Gleaner,' and dicates the single life, and depicts which is no doubt intended to be neighbours call genteel. Gentility allegorical of marriage-

'Double, double, toil and trouble."

Besides, no single man can be fairly called poor. What double man can with certainty be called rich? A single man can lodge in a garret. knows, nobody cares. Let him I'm single." marry, and he invites the world to witness where he lodges, and how demands is the most ruinous, the a reverie that seemed gloomy, he most indefinite superfluity; it is shot back to shore. Gentility according to what her commences with the honeymoon; it is its shadow, and lengthens as the moon declines. When the honey is all gone, your bride says, 'We can have our tea without sugar when quite alone, love; but in case Gentility drop in, here's a bill for and dine on a herring; nobody silver sugar-tongs!' That's why

" Economy again, Vance." "Prudence - dignity," answered he dines. The first necessary a wife Vance, seriously; and sinking into

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Vance explains how he came to grind colours and save halfpence.-A sudden annonnement.

THE meal was over-the table had there was something in your fate been spread by a window that looked distinct from that of the other boys upon the river. The moon was up; -whom the master might call quite the young men asked for no other as clever-felt that faith in yourself lights; conversation between them which made you sure that you -often shifting, often pausing-had would be one day what you are. gradually become grave, as it usually limitless Obscure.

"There is so much power in faith," said Lionel, "even when at school, you felt convinced that will do,' but 'I must.'"

"Well, I suppose so; but vague does, with two companions in youth; aspirations and self-conceits must while yet long vistas in the Future be bound together by some practical stretch before them deep in shadow, necessity-perhaps a very homely and they fall into confiding talk on and a very vulgar one-or they what they wish-what they fear: scatter and evaporate. One would making visionary maps in that think that rich people in high life ought to do more than poor folks in humble life. More pains are taken with their education; they have faith is applied but to things human more leisure for following the bent and earthly, that let a man be but of their genius; yet it is the poor firmly persuaded that he is born to folks, often half self-educated, and do, some day, what at the moment with pinched bellies, that do threeseems impossible, and it is fifty to fourths of the world's grand labour. one but what he does it before he Poverty is the keenest stimulant, dies. Surely, when you were a child and poverty made me not say, 'I

"You knew real poverty in child-| stant when she had not a farthing, hood, Frank?"

"Real poverty, covered over with sham affluence. My father was Genteel Poverty, and my mother was Poor Gentility. The sham affluence went when my father died. The real poverty then came out in all its ugliness. I was taken from a genteel school, at which, long afterwards, I genteelly paid the bills : and I had to support my mother somehow or other-somehow or other I succeeded. Alas, I fear not genteelly! But before I lost her, which I did in a few years, she had some comforts which were not appearances; and she kindly allowed, dear soul, that gentility and shams do not go well together. O! beware of debt, Lionello mio; and never call that economy meanness which is but the safeguard from mean degrada-

"I understand you at last, Vance: shake hands-I know why you are saving." "Habit now," answered Vance, repressing praise of himself, as usual. "Bnt I remember so well when twopence was a sum to be respected, that to this day I would rather put it by than spend it. All our ideas - like orange-plantsspread out in proportion to the size of the box which imprisons the roots. Then I had a sister." Vance paused a moment, as if in pain, but went on with seeming carelessness. leaning over the window-sill, and turning his face from his friend, "I had a sister older than myself. handsome, gentle. I was so proud of her! Foolish girl! my love was not enough for her. Foolish girl! she could not wait to see what I might live to do for her. She married-oh! so genteelly!-a young wooed her before my father died, valet, was in waiting at the door, and he was dependent on distant relations and his own domains in Parnassus. The wretch was a poet! So they married. They spent their honeymoon genteelly, I daresay. His relations cut him. Parnassus paid no rents. He went abroad. Such heart-rending letters from her! They were destitute. How I worked! how I raged! But how could I maintain her and her husband too, mere child that I was? No matter. They are dead now, both :- all dead for whose sake I first ground colours and saved halfpence. And Frank Vance is a stables, and see the horse pnt to." As the friends re-entered London. Vance said, "Set me down anywhere in Piccadilly: I will walk home. You, I suppose, of course, are staying with your mother in selfish bachelor.

revive this dull subject again, or I shall borrow a crown from you, and cut you dead. Waiter, ho !- the bill. I'll just go round to the stingy.

Gloucester Place?"

"No," said Lionel, rather embarrassed: "Colonel Morley, who acts for me as if he were my guardian. took a lodging for me in Chesterfield Street, Mayfair. My hours, I fear, would ill suit my dear mother. Only in town two days; and, thanks to Morley, my table is already covered with invitations."

"Yet you gave me one day, generous friend!"

"You the second day-my mother the first. But there are three balls before me to-night. Come home with me, and smoke your cigar while I dress."

" No: but I will at least light my cigar in your hall .- prodigal !"

Lionel now stopped at his lodging. man. very well born, who had The groom, who served him also as He had the villany to remain con- "A note for you, sir, from Colonel opened it, and read:-

Morley-just come." Lionel hastily London. Keep yourself free all tomorrow, when, no doubt, he will see "MY DEAR HAUGHTON, — Mr. you. I am hurrying off to him.— Darrell has suddenly arrived in Yours in haste, A. V. M."

CHAPTER III.

Once more Guy Darrell.

other establishment than his old

GUY DARRELL was alone. A lofty | friendly chambers may be-if it has room in a large house on the first only been deserted in the meanfloor. His own house in Carlton while (not let to new races, who, by Gardens, which he had occupied their own shifting dynasties, have during his brief and brilliant par- supplanted the rightful lord, and liamentary career; since then, left half-effaced his memorials), the walls contemptuously to the care of a may still greet you forgivingly, the house agent, to be let by year or by character of Home be still there. season, it had known various tenants You take up again the thread of of an opulence and station suitable associations which had been suspento its space and site. Dinners and ded, not snapped. But it is otherconcerts, routs and balls, had as- wise with a house in oities, especially sembled the friends and jaded the in our fast-living London, where few spirits of many a gracious host and houses descend from father to son smiling hostess. The tenure of one -where the title-deeds are rarely of these temporary occupants had more than those of a purchased recently expired, and ere the agent lease for a term of years, after which bad found another, the long absent your property quits you. A house owner dropped down into its silen- in London, which your father never ced halls as from the clouds, without entered, in which no elbow-chair, no old-fashioned work-table, recall servant Mills and the woman in to you the kind smile of a mothercharge of the house. There, as in a - a house that you have left as you caravanserai, the traveller took his leave an inn, let to people whose rest, stately and desolate. Nothing names you scarce know, with as so comfortless as one of those large little respect for your family records London houses all to oneself. In as you have for theirs; when you long rows against the walls stood the return after a long interval of years empty fauteuils. Spectral from the to a house like that, you stand as gilded ceiling hung lightless chan- stood Darrell - a forlorn stranger deliers. The furniture, pompous, under your own roof-tree. What but worn by use and faded by time, cared he for those who had last seemed mementoes of departed gathered round those hearths with revels. When you return to your their chill steely grates - whose own house in the country - no forms had reclined on those formal matter how long the absence-no couches-whose feet had worn away matter how decayed by neglect the the gloss from those costly carpets?

Histories in the lives of many might | may be calm, but in calm it is vivid; be recorded within those walls. not a ray, sent from brain or from Lovers there had breathed their heart, is yet flickering down. On first vows; bridal feasts had been the whole, however, there is less held; babes had crowed in the arms composure than of old in his mien of proud young mothers; politicians and bearing—less of that resignation there had been raised into minis-which seemed to say, "I have done ters; ministers there had fallen with the substances of life." Still back into independent members:" there was gloom, but it was more through those doors corpses had broken and restless. been borne forth to relentless vaults. that human breast was again ad-For these races and their records mitting, or forcing itself to court, what cared the owner? Their human hopes, human objects. Rewriting was not on the walls, turning to the substances of life, Sponged out as from a slate, their their movement was seen in the reckenings with Time; leaving dim, shadows which, when they wrap us here and there, some chance scratch round at remoter distance, seem to of his own, blurred and bygone. lose their trouble as they gain their Leaning against the mantelpiece, width. He broke from his musing Darrell gazed round the room with attitude with an abrupt angry movea vague wistful look, as if seeking to ment, as if shaking off thoughts conjure up associations that might which displeased him, and gathering link the present hour to that past his arms tightly to his breast, in a life which had slipped away else- gesture peculiar to himself, walked where; and his profile, reflected on to and fro the room, murmuring the mirror behind, pale and mourn- inaudibly. The door opened; he ful, seemed like that ghost of him- turned quickly, and with an evident self which his memory silently evoked.

The man is but little altered exstood on those unwelcoming floors; tightly clasped in each other, in true the form still retained the same English greeting-their eyes moisspeakable dignity of mien and bear-ing—the same thoughtful bend of Alban was the first to recover the proud neck-so distinct, in its self - possession; and when the some painful thought his hand secret?" swept the loose carls from his fore- "Suspense from life - hybernahead, the silver threads might now ting. But you beat me; you have be seen shooting here and there- been spending life, yet seem as rich vanishing almost as soon as seen, in it as when we parted." No, whatever the baptismal register "No; I begin to decry the present

Evidently sense of relief, for his face brightened. "Alban, my dear Alban."

"Darrell-old friend-old schoolternally since we saw him last, friend-dear, dear Guy Darrell!" however inly changed since he last The two Englishmen stood. hands vigour and symmetry-the same un- tening with remembrances that elastic rebound, from the stoop of friends had seated themselves, he debility or age. Thick as ever the surveyed Darrell's countenance rich mass of dark - brown hair, deliberately, and said: "So little though, when in the impatience of change!—wenderful! What is your may say to the contrary, that man and laud the past-to read with is not old-not even elderly; in the glasses, to decide from prejudice, to deep of that clear grey eye light recoil from change, to find sense in twaddle - to know the value of have I ransacked, and pierced as health from the fear to lose it-to feel an interest in rhenmatism, an awe of bronchitis-to tell anecdotes, and to wear flannel. To you in strict confidence I disclose the truth -I am no longer twenty-five. You laugh-this is civilized talk; does it not refresh you after the gibberish you must have chattered in Asia Minor?"

Darrell might have answered in the affirmative with truth. What man, after long years of solitude, is not refreshed by talk, however trivial, that recals to him the gay time of the world he remembered in his young day - and recalls it to him on the lips of a friend in youth! But Darrell said nothing; only he settled himself in his chair with a more cheerful ease, and inclined his relaxing brows with a nod of encouragement or assent.

Colonel Morley continued. "But when did you arrive? whence? How long do you stay here? What are your plans?"

DARRELL.-Cresar could not be more laconic. When arrived ?-this evening. Whence? — Ouzelford. How long do I stay?-nncertain. What are my plans?-let us discuss them."

COLONEL MORLEY .- " With all my heart, You have plans, then? -a good sign. Animals in hybernation form none."

DARRELL (putting aside the lights on the table, so as to leave his face in shade, and looking towards the floor as he speaks).-" For the last five years I have struggled hard to renew interest in mankind, reconnect myself with common life and its healthful objects. Between Fawley and London I desired to form a magnetic medium. I took rather a far into Africa as traveller ever went in search of Timbuctoo. But I have sojourned also, at long intervals-at least they seemed long to me-in the gay capitals of Europe (Paris excepted); mixed, too, with the gavest -hired palaces, filled them with guests-feasted and heard music. 'Guy Darrell,' said I, 'shake off the rust of years—thou hadst no youth while young. Be young now. A holiday may restore thee to wholesome work, as a holiday restores the wearied schoolboy."

COLONEL MOBLEY,-" I comprehend: the experiment succeeded." DARRELL.-" I don't know-not yet-bnt it may; I am here, and I intend to stay. I would not go to a hotel for a single day, lest my resolution should fail me. I have thrown myself into this castle of care without even a garrison. I hope to hold it. Help me to man it. In a word. and without metaphor, I am here with the design of re-entering London life."

COLONEL MORLEY .- " I am so glad. Hearty congratulations! How rejoiced all the Viponts will be ! Another 'CRISIS' is at hand. You have seen the newspapers regularly, of course—the state of the country interests you. You say that you come from Ouzelford, the town you once represented. I guess you will re-enter Parliament; you have but to say the word."

DARRELL.—" Parliament ! I received, while abroad, so earnest a request from my old constituents to lay the foundation-stone of a new Town-Hall, in which they are much interested, and my obligations to them have been so great that I could not refuse. I wrote to fix the day as soon as I had resolved to revast one-nearly all the rest of the turn to England, making a condition known world. I have visited both that I should be spared the inflic-Americas-either Ind. All Asia tion of a public dinner, and landed just in time to keep my appointment-reached Ouzelford early this morning, went through the ceremony, made a short speech, came on at once to London, not venturing to diverge to Fawley (which is not very far from Ouzelford), lest, once there again, I should not have strength to leave it - and here I am." Darrell paused, then repeated, in brisk emphatio tone: "Parliament? No. Labour? No. Fellowman. I am about to confess to you; I would snatch back some days of youth-a wintry likeness of youth -better than none. Old friend, let us amuse ourselves! When I was working hard-hard-hard-it was you who would say: 'Come forth, he amused'-vou! happy butterfly that you were! Now, I say to you: Show me this flaunting town that you know so well; initiate me into the joy of polite pleasures, social commune-

Dulce mihi furere est amico."

You have amusements, let me share them."

"Faith," quoth the Colonel, crossing his legs, "ou come late in the day! Amusements cease to amuse at last. I have tried all, and begin to be tired. I have had my holiday, exhausted its sports; and you, coming from books and desk fresh into the playground, say, 'Football and leapfrog'. Alas! my poor friend, why did not you come sooner?"

Darrett.—"One word, one question. You have made ask a philosophy and a system; no man ever did so with more felicitors grace; nor, in following pleasure, have you parted company with conscience and shame. A fine gentleman ever, in honour as in elegance. Well, are you satisfied with your choice of life? Are you happy?"

" Happy-who is? Satisfied, perhaps!"

"Is there any one you envywhose choice, other than your own, you would prefer?"

" Certainly."
" Who?"

"You."
"I!" said Darrell, opening his eves with unaffected amaze. "I!

envy me! prefer my choice!" COLONEL MORLEY (peevishly) .-"Without doubt. You have had gratified ambition-a great career. Envy you! who would not? Your own objects in life fulfilled; you coveted distinction - you won it; fortune-your wealth is immense; the restoration of your name and lineage from obscurity and humiliation - are not name and lineage again written in the Libro d'oro? What king would not hail you as his councillor? what senate not open its ranks to admit you as a chief? what house, though the haughtiest in the land, would not accept your alliance? And withal, you stand before me stalwart and unbowed, young blood still in your veins. Ungrateful man, who would not change lots with Guy Darrell? Fame, fortune, health, and, not to flatter you, a form and presence that would be remarked, though you stood in that black frock by the side of a monarch in his coronation robes."

Darret.—" You have turned my questions against myself with a kindliness of intention that makes me forgive your belief in my vamity. Pass on -or rather pass back; you say you have tried all in life that distracts or sweetens. Not so; lone bachelor; you have not tried wedlock. Has not that been your mistake?"

COLONEL MORLEY. — "Answer for yourself. You have tried it." The words were scarce out of his mouth ere he repented the retort. For Darrell started as if stung to the quick; and his brow, before serene, his lip, before playful, grew, the one | come here to choose; and in this I out the friend.

not political-any other. But first, your report of young Haughton. Cordial thanks for all your kindness to him. You write me word that he is much improved-most likeable; you add, that at Paris he became the rage—that in London you are sure he will be extremely popular. Be it so, if for his own sake. Are you quite sure that it is not for the expectations which I come here to disperse?"

COLONEL MOBLEY .- " Much for himself, I am certain : a little, perhaps, because, whatever he thinks, and I say, to the contrary,-people seeing no other heir to your property-"

" I understand," interrupted Darrell quickly. "But he does not nurse those expectations? he will not be disappointed?"

COLONEL MORLEY .- " Verily I believe, that, apart from his love for you, and a delicacy of sentiment that would recoil from planting hopes of wealth in the graves of just eighteen-who-" benefactors, Lionel Haughton would prefer carving his own fortunes to all the ingots hewed out of California by another's hand, and bequeathed by another's will." DARRELL.-" I am heartily glad to hear and to trust you." COLONEL MORLEY .- " I gather from what you say that you are here with the intention to-to-"

"Marry again," said Darrell firmly. "Right. I am."

"I always felt sure you would marry again. Is the lady here too?" " What lady?"

" The lady you have chosen,"

"Tush-I have chosen none.

darkly troubled, the other tightly ask advice from your experience. compressed, "Pardon me," faltered I would marry again! I-at my age! Ridiculous! But so it is. DARRELL.-" O yes; I brought it You know all the mothers and on myself. What stuff we have marriageable daughters that Lonbeen talking! Tell me the news- don-arida nutrix-rears for nuntial altars-where, amongst them, shall I, Guy Darrell, the man whom you think so enviable, find the safe helpmate, whose love he may reward with munificent jointure, to whose child he may bequeath the name that has now no successor, and the wealth ho has no heart to spend?" Colonel Morley-who, as we know, is by habit a match-maker, and likes the vocation-assumes a placid but cogitative mien, rubs his brow gently, and says in his softest, bestbred accents - "You would not marry a mere girl? some one of suitable age? I know several most superior young women on the other side of thirty, Wilhelmina Prymme, for instance, or Janet-" decidedly no!"

DARRELL.-" Old maids.

COLONEL MORLEY (suspiciously). -" But you would not risk the peace of your old age with a girl of eighteen, or else I do know a very accomplished, well-brought-up girl:

DARRELL.-" Re-enter life by the side of Eighteen! am I a madman?"

COLONEL MORLEY .- " Neither old maids nor young maids; the choice becomes narrowed. You would prefer a widow. Ha; I have thought of one! a prize, indeed, could you but win her, the widow of-"

DARRELL. - "Ephesus ! - Bah ! suggest no widow to me. A widow. with her affections buried in the grave!"

MORLEY. - " Not necessarily.

And in this case-"

DARRELL (interrupting, and with warmth),-"In every case, I tell other while life is fresh! Strange, you, no widow shall doff her weeds strange-look out into the world; for me. Did she love the first man? mark the man of our years who fickle is the woman who can love shall be most courted, most adulated, twice. Did she not love him? why did she marry him? perhaps she sold herself to a rent-roll? Shall genius, fame. See all the younger she sell herself again to me, for a jointure? Heaven forbid! Talk hope or awe: his word can make not of widows. No dainty so flavourless as a heart warmed up again."

COLONEL MOBLEY. - " Neither maids, be they old or young, nor widows. Possibly you want an angel. London is not the place for feet of Beauty. I enter the lists of angels."

choice seems involved in perplexity. twenty-four can jostle him aside; How can it be otherwise if oneself before, the object of reverence, he is is perplexed? And yet, Alban, I am serious; and I do not presume to be so exacting as my words have implied. I ask not fortune, nor rank beyond gentle blood, nor youth, nor beauty, nor accomplishments, nor fashion, but I do ask one thing, and one thing only."

COLONEL MOBLEY .- "What is the having, to ask for." left all! I ask some one whom I like Adonis. Only choose well; can love; love better than all the that's the difficulty-if it was not world-not the mariage de conve- difficult, who would be a bachelor!" nance, not the mariage de raison, but the mariage d'amour. All other marriage, with vows of love so solemn, with intimacy of commune so close, all other marriage, in my eyes, is an acted falsehood-a varnished sin. Ah, if I had thought so always! But away regret and repentance! The Future alone is now before me! Alban Morley! I would sign away all I have in the world (save the old house at Fawley), ay, and after signing, cut off, to boot, this right hand, could I but once I dine at them myself?" fall in love; love, and be loved again, as any two of heaven's simplest np his hat. human creatures may love each or admired. Give him all the attributes of power, wealth, royalty, generations bow before him with their fortune; at his smile a reputation dawns. Well; now let that man say to the young. Room amonest yourselves-all that wins me this homage I would lay at the gels." love, and straightway his power barrent that the vanishes, the poorest booby of now the butt of ridicule. The instant he asks right to win the heart of woman, a boy whom, in all else, he could rule as a lackey, cries, 'Off. Greybeard, that realm at least is mine!""

COLONEL MORLEY .- "This were but eloquent extravagance, even if your beard were grey. Meu older that? you have left nothing worth than you, and with half your pretensions, even of outward form. DARRELL.—"Nothing! I have have carried away hearts from boys

DARRELL-"Guide my choice.

Pilot me to the haven."

COLONEL MOBLEY .- " Accepted ! But you must remount a suitable establishment; reopen your way to the great world, and penetrate those sacred recesses where awaiting spinisters weave the fatal web. Leave all to me. Let Mills (I see you have him still) call on me tomorrow about your ménage. You will give dinners, of course?"

DARRELL .- "Oh, of course ; must Morley laughed softly, and took

"So soon!" cried Darrell. "If I fatigue you already, what chance of his eldest son (who married last shall I have with new friends?" "So soon! it is past eleven. And it is you who must be fatigued." "No such good luck; were I fatigued, I might hope to sleep. I will walk back with you. Leave me not alone in this room-alone in the iaws of a Fish: swallowed up by a creature whose blood is cold."

"You have something still to say to me," said Alban, when they were in the open air; "I detect it in your manner-what is it?"

"I know not. But you have told me no news; these streets are grown strange to me. Who live now in yonder houses? once the dwellers were my friends."

"In that house—oh, new people; I forget their names-but rich-in a year or two, with luck, they may be exclusives, and forget my name. In the other house, Carr Vipont, still."

"Vipont; those dear Viponts! what of them all? crawl they? sting they? Bask they in the sun? or are they in anxious process of a change of skin?"

"Hush, my dear friend; no satire on your own connections: nothing so injudicious. I am a Vipont, too. and all for the family maxim-'Vipont with Vipont, and come what may ! ""

"I stand rebuked. But I am no Vipont. I married, it is true, into their house, and they married, ages ago, into mine; but no drop in the blood of time-servers flows through the veins of the last childless Darrell. · Pardon. I allow the merit of the Vipont race; no family more excites my respectful interest. What was staying at Carr's at the time. of their births, deaths, and marriages?"

birth of a grandson; the first-born jects,"

year a daughter of the Duke of Halifax)-a promising young man, a Lord in the Admiralty. Carr has a second son in the ---- Hussars; has just purchased his step: the other boys are still at school. He has three daughters too, fine girls. admirably brought up; indeed, now I think of it, the eldest, Honoria, might suit you, highly accomplished -well read, interests herself in politics-a great admirer of intellect, of a very serious turn of mind.

too.30 Darbell.-"A female politician with a serious turn of mind-a farthing rushlight in a London fog! Hasten on to subjects less gloomy. Whose funeral Achievement is that yonder?"

COLONEL MORLEY .- " The late Lord Niton's, father to Lady Montfort."

DARRELL - Lady Montfort! Her father was a Lyndsay, and died before the Flood, A deluge, at least, has gone over me and my world since I looked on the face of his widow."

COLONEL MORLEY .- "I speak of the present Lord Montfort's wifethe Earl's. You of the poor Marquess's - the last Marquess - the marquesate is extinct. Surely, whatever your wanderings, you must have heard of the death of the last Marquess of Montfort ? "

"Yes, I heard of that," answered Darrell, in a somewhat husky and muttered voice. "So he is dead. the young man! - What killed him?"

COLONEL MORLEY .- " A violent attack of croup-quite sudden. suspect that Carr made him talk! a thing he was not accustomed to COLONEL MORLEY, - " As to do: Deranged his system altogether. births, Carr has just welcomed the But don't let us revive painful sub-

DARRELL.-" Was she with him | Commons-respectable man-great at the time?"

COLONEL MORLEY. - " Lady Montfort ?-No: they were very seldom together." DARRELL .- " She is not married again vet?" COLONEL MORLEY .- " No. but still young, and so beautiful, she will have many offers. I know those who are waiting to propose. Montfort has been only dead eighteen months - died just before young Carr's marriage. His widow lives, in complete seclusion, at her jointurehouse near Twickenham. She has only seen even me once since her loss."

DARRELL .- "When was that?" MORLEY .- "About six or seven months ago; she asked after you with much interest." DARRELL .- " After me!"

COLONEL MORLEY.-"To be sure. Don't I remember how constantly she and her mother were at your house? Is it strange that she should ask after you? You ought to know her better-the most affectionate grateful character."

DARRELL,-"I dare say. But at the time you refer to, I was too occupied to acquire much accurate knowledge of a young lady's charac-I should have known her mother's character better, yet I mistook even that."

MOBLEY. - "Mrs. COLONEL Lyndsay's character you might well mistake,-charming but artificial: Lady Montfort is natural. Indeed. if you had not that illiberal prejudice against widows, she was the very person I was about to suggest to you."

DARRELL. - " A fashionable beauty! and young enough to be office." my daughter. Such is human friendship! So the marquesate is in mournful strain, Darrell silent by extinct, and Sir James Vipont, his side, till the Colonel reached his anthority on cattle - timid, and always saying, 'Did you read that article in to-day's paper?'-has the estates and the earldom."

COLONEL MORLEY. - "Yes. There was some fear of a disputed succession, but Sir James made his claim very clear. Between you and me, the change has been a serious affliction to the Viponts. The late Lord was not wise, but on State occasions he looked his part-très Grand Seigneur-and Carr managed the family influence with admirable tact. The present Lord has the habits of a yeoman; his wife shares his tastes. He has taken the management not only of the property. but of its influence, out of Carr's hands, and will make a sad mess of it, for he is an impracticable, obsolete politician. He will never keep the family together-impossible-a sad thing. I remember how onr last muster, five years ago next Christmas, struck terror into Lord --- 's Cabinet ; the mere report of it in the newspapers set all people talking and thinking. The result was, that, two weeks after, proper overtures were made to Carr-he consented to assist the ministersand the country was saved! Now, thanks to this stupid new Earl, in eighteen months we have lost ground which it took at least a century and a half to gain. Our votes are divided, our influence frittered away: Montfort-house is shut up, and Carr, grown quite thin, says that in the coming 'CRISIS' a Cabinet will not only be formed, but will also last-last time enough for irreparable mischief,-without a single Vipont in Thus Colonel Morley continued whom I remember in the House of own door. There, while applying his latch-key to the lock, Alban's mind returned from the perils that threatened the House of Vipont and the Star of Brunswick, to the petty claims of private friendship. But even these last were now blended with those grander interests, due care for which every true patriot of the House of Vipont imbibed with his mother's milk.

"Your appearance in town, my dear Darrell, is most opportune. It will be an object with the whole family to make the most of you at this coming 'CRISIS'-I say coming, for I believe it must come. Your name is still freshly rememberedbeen out of all the scrapes of the party the last sixteen or seventeen years: your house should be the nucleus of new combinations. Don't forget to send Mills to me; I will engage your chef and your housesteward to-morrow. I know just the men to suit you. Your intention to marry, too, just at this moment, is most seasonable; it will increase the family interest. I may give out that you intend to marry?" "Oh. certainly-cry it at Charing

Cross."

" A club-room will do as well. I beg ten thousand pardons; but people will talk about money whenever they talk about marriage. I should not like to exagerate your fortune-I know it must be very large, and all at your own disposal -Eh?"

" Every shilling."

"You must have saved a great deal since you retired into private life?"

"Take that for granted. Dick Fairthorn receives my rents, and looks to my various investments; and I accept him as an indisputable authority when I say, that what with your position greater for having the rental of lands I purchased in my poor boy's lifetime, and the interest on my much more lucrative moneyed capital, you may safely whisper to all ladies likely to feel interest in that diffusion of knowledge, 'Thirty-five thousand a-year, and an old fool."

"I certainly shall not say an old fool, for I am the same age as yourself; and if I had thirty-five thousand pounds a-year, I would marry too." "You would! Old fool!" said Darrell, turning away.

CHAPTER IV.

Revealing glimpses of Guy Darrell's past in his envied prime. Dig but deep enough; and under all earth runs water, under all life runs grief.

ALONE in the streets, the vivacity | to the solitude of his home, he which had characterised Darrell's walked on at first mechanically, in countenance as well as his words, the restless desire of movement, he while with his old school friend, cared not whither. But as, thus changed as suddenly and as com- chance-led, he found himself in the pletely into pensive abstracted centro of that long straight thogloom as if he had been acting a roughfare which connects what part, and with the exit the acting once were the separate villages of ccased. Disinclined to return yet Tyburn and Holborn, something in gested an object to his devious feet, admiring interest, in the gay white He had but to follow that street to would-be Grecian edifice, with its his right hand, to gain in a quarter French grille, bronzed, gilded, the of an hour a sight of the humble transformed Museum in the still dwelling-house in which he had first libraries of which he had sometimes settled down, after his early marriage, to the arid labours of the bar. He would go, now that, wealthy and renowned, he was revisiting the long-deserted focus of English energies, and contemplate the obscure abode in which his powers had been first concentrated on the pursuit of renown and wealth. Who among my readers that may have risen on the glittering steep ("Ah, who can tell how hard it is to climb!"*) has not been similarly attracted towards the roof at the craggy foot of the ascent, under which golden dreams refreshed his straining sinews? Somewhat quickening his steps, now that a bourne was assigned to them, the man growing old in years, but, unhappily for himself, too tenacious of youth in its grand discontent, and keen susceptibilities to pain, strode noiselessly on, under the gaslights, under the stars: gaslights primly marshalled at equidistance; stars that seem to the naked eye dotted over space without symmetry or method -Man's order, near and finite, is so distinct : the Maker's order, remote, infinite, is so beyond Man's comprehension even of what is order!

Darrell paused hesitating. He had now gained a spot in which improvement had altered the landmarks. The superb broad thoroughfare continued where once it had vanished abrupt in a labyrinth of courts and alleys. But the way was not hard to find. He turned a little

· "Ah, who can tell how hard it is to

The steep where Fame's proud temple shines afar ? "

BEATTLE.

the desultory links of reverie sug- | towards the left, recognising, with snatched a brief and ghostly respite from books of law. Onwards yet through lifeless Bloomsbury, not so far towards the last bounds of Atlas as the desolation of Podden Place, but the solitude deepening as he passed. There it is, a quiet street indeed! not a sonl on its gloomy pavements, not even a policeman's soul. Nought stirring save a stealthy, profligate, good-for-nothing cat, flitting fine through you area bars. Down that street had he come, I trow, with a livelier, quicker step the day when, by the strange goodluck which had uniformly attended his wordly career of honours, he had been suddenly called upon to supply the place of an absent senior, and, in almost his earliest brief, the Courts of Westminster had recognised a master :- come. I trow, with a livelier step, knocked at that very door whereat he is halting now; entered the room where the young wife sat, and at sight of her quernlous peevish face, and at sound of her upsympathising languid voice, fled into his cupboardlike back parlour-and muttered "courage courage" to endure the home he had entered longing for a voice which should invite and respond to a cry of joy. How closed up, dumb, and blind, looked the small mean house, with its small mean door, its small mean rayless windows. Yet a FAME had been born there! Who are the residents now? Buried in slumber. have they any "golden dreams?" Works therein any struggling brain, to which the prosperous man might whisper "courage;" or beats, there, any troubled heart to which faithful

Who knows? London is a wondrous poem, but each page of it is written in a different language; no lexicon yet composed for any.

Back through the street, under the gaslights, under the stars, went Guy Darrell, more slow and more thoughtful. Did the comparison between what he had been, what he was, the mean home just revisited, the stately home to which he would return, suggest thoughts of natural pride? It would not seem so; no pride in those close-shut lips, in that melancholy stoop.

He came into a quiet square-still Bloomsbury-and right before him was a large respectable mansion, almost as large as that one in courtlier quarters, to which he loiteringly delayed the lone return. There, too. had been for a time the dwelling which was called his home-there, when gold was rolling in like a tide. distinction won, position assured, there, not yet in Parliament, but foremost at the bar-already pressed by constituencies, already wooed by ministers-there, still young (O, luckiest of lawyers !)-there had he moved his household gods. Fit residence for a Prince of the Gown. Is it when living there that you would envy the prosperous man? Yes, the moment his step quits that door: but envy him when he enters its threshold?-nay, envy rather that roofless Savoyard who has crept under yonder portico, asleep with his ragged arm round the cage of his stupid dormice! There, in that great barren drawing-room, sits a

" Pale and elegant Aspasia."

Well, but the wife's face is not querulous now. Look again-anxious. fearful, secret, sly. Oh! that fine looked on that large, most respectlady, a Vipont Crooke, is not con- able house, and remembered his tented to be wife to the wealthy, hourly campaign against disgrace ! great Mr. Darrell. What wants she? He has triumphed. Death fights for woman should murmur "joy?" | that he should be spouse to the fashionable fine Mrs. Darrell? Pride in him! not a jot of it; such pride were unchristian. Were he proud of her, as a Christian husband ought to be of so elegant a wife, would he still be in Bloomsbury? Envy him! the high gentleman, so true to his blood, all galled and blistered by the moral vulgarities of a tuft-hunting, toad-eating mimio of the Lady Selinas. Envy him! Well, why not? All women have their foibles. Wise husbands must bear and forbear. Is that all? wherefore, then, is her aspect so furtive, wherefore on his a wild, vigilant sternness? Tut, what so brings into coveted fashion a fair lady exiled to Bloomsbury as the marked adoration of a lord, not her own, who gives law to St. James's! Untempted by passion, cold as ice to affection, if thawed to the gush of a sentiment, secretly preferring the husband she chose, woord, and won, to idlers less gifted even in outward attractions;-all this, yet seeking, coquetting for, the éclat of dishonour! To elope? Oh, no, too wary for that, but to be gazed at and talked of, as the fair Mrs. Darrell, to whom the Lovelace of London was so fondly devoted. Walk in, haughty son of the Dare-all. Darest thou ask who has just left thy house. Darest thou ask what and whence is the note that sly hand has secreted? Darest thou?-perhaps yes: what then? canst thou lock up thy wife? canst thou poniard the Lovelace? Lock up the air! poniard all whose light word in St. James's can bring into fashion the matron of Bloomsbury! Go, lawyer, go, study briefs, and be parchment.

Agonies - agonies - shot again through Guy Darrell's breast, as he him: on the very brink of the last treacherous fool. Envy you that scandal, a cold, caught at some Vi- mourner? No! not even in his repont's ball, became fever; and so lease. Memory is not nailed down from that door the Black Horses in the velvet coffin; and to great bore away the Bloomsbury Dame, loyal natures, less bitter is the meere she was yet—the fashion! Happy mory of the lost when hallowed by in grief the widower who may, with tender sadness, than when coupled confining hand, ransack the lost wife's with scorn and shame. harmless desk, sure that no thought The wife is dead. Dead, too, long concealed from him in life will rise years ago, the Lothario! The world accusing from the treasured papers. has forgotten them; they fade out But that pale proud mourner, hur- of this very record when ye turn rying the eye over sweet-scented the page; no influence no bearing billets, compelled, in very justice to have they on such future events as the dead, to convince himself that may mark what yet rests of life to the mother of his children was cor- Guy Darrell. But as he there stands rupt only at heart-that the Black and gazes into space, the two forms Horses had come to the door in time are before his eye as distinct as if -and, wretchedly consoled by that living still. Slowly, slowly he gazes niggardly conviction, flinging into them down; the false smiles flicker the flames the last flimsy tatters on away from their feeble lineaments; which his honour (rock-like in his woe and terror on their aspects— own keeping) had been fluttering to they sink, they shrivel, they disand fro in the charge of a vain solve!

CHAPTER V.

The wreck cast back from Charybdis. Souviene-toi de ta Gabrielle.

GUY DARRELL turned hurriedly an alley fronting him at right angles, square, and, more and more absorbed ill-boding tatterdemalion figure, looking vaguely round, he saw that ragged wayfarer recognise a fee by lanes and passages. He paused or is he a mere vulgar footpad, who under one of the rare lamp-posts, is doubting whether he should gathering up his recollections of the spring upon a prey? Hostile his London he had so long quitted, and look-his gesture-the sudden cowdoubtful for a moment or two which ering down of the strong frame, as turn to take. Just then, up from if for a bound; but still he is irre-

from the large house in the great came sullenly, warily, a tall, sinewy, in reverie, he wandered out of his and, seeing Darrell's face under the direct way homeward, clear and lamp, halted abrupt at the mouth of broad though it was, and did not the narrow passage from which it rouse himself till he felt, as it were, had emerged - a dark form filling that the air had grown darker; and up the dark aperture. Does that he had strayed into a dim maze of the imperfect ray of the lamplight?

awes the tiger, who would obey his slim, long-backed officer, and broken blood-instinct without fear, in his him in two as a willow-wand. But rush on the Negro-the Hindoobut who halts and hesitates at sight of the white man-the lordly son of Europe? Darrell's eye was turned towards the dark passage-towards the dark figure-carelessly, neither recognising, nor fearing, nor defying -carelessly, as at any harmless object in crowded streets, and at broad day. But while that eye was on him, the tatterdemalion halted; and, indeed, whatever his hostility, or whatever his daring, the sight of Darrell took him by so sudden a surprise, that he could not at once re-collect his thoughts, and determine how to approach the quiet unconscious man who, in reach of his spring, fronted his overwhelming physical strength with the habitual air of dignified command. His first impulse was that of violence; his second impulse curbed the first. But Darrell now turns quickly, and walks straight on; the figure quits the mouth of the passage, and follows with a long and noiseless stride. It has nearly gained Darrell. With what intent? A fierce one, perhaps-for the man's face is sinister, and his state evidesperate - when there dently emerges unexpectedly from an ugly-looking court or cul-de-sac, just between Darrell and his pursuer, a slim, long-backed, buttonedup, weazel-faced policeman. policeman eyes the tatterdemalion instinctively, then turns his glance towards the solitary defenceless gentleman in advance, and walks the sea-side on foot; see, his shoes on, keeping himself between the are worn into holes. He has not two. The tatterdemalion stifles an | yet found a shelter for the night. impatient curse. Be his purpose He has been directed towards that force, be it only supplication, be it quarter, thronged with adventurers, fulfil it while that policeman is safe, if squalid. It is somewhere there. True, that in his powerful near that court, at the mouth of solute. What awes him? What | hands he could have clutched that that officer is the Personation of Law, and can stalk through a legion of tatterdemalions as a ferret may glide through a barn full of rate. The prowler feels he is suspected. Unknown as yet to the London police, he has no desire to invite their scrutiny. He crosses the way ; he falls back : he follows from afar. The policeman may yet turn away before the safer streets of the metropolis be gained. No: the cursed Incarnation of Law, with eyes in its slim back, continues its slow stride at the heels of the unsuspicious Darrell. The more solitary defiles are already passed-now that dim lane, with its dead wall on one side. By the dead wall skulks the prowler: on the other side still walks the Law. Now-alas for the prowler !- shine out the thoroughfares, no longer dim nor deserted-Leicester Square, the Haymarket, Pall Mall, Carlton Gardens; Darrell is at his door. The policeman turns sharply round. There, at the corner near the learned Clubhouse, halts the tatterdemalion. Towards the tatterdemalion the policeman now advances quickly. The tatterdemalion is quicker still-fled like a guilty thought.

Back-back-back into that maze of passages and courts-back to the mouth of that black alley. There he halts again. Look at him. He has arrived in London but that very night, after an absence of more than four years. He has arrived from colloquy of any kind, impossible to native and foreign, for a shelter, pawn-tickets of foreign monts de be redeemed; scrawls by villanous hands in thievish hieroglyphics: ugly implements replacing the malachite penknife, the golden tooth-pick, the jewelled pencil-case. once so neatly set within their satin lappets. Ugly implements, indeeda file, a gimlet, loaded dice. Pellmell, with such more hideous and recent contents, dishonoured evidences of gandier summer life locks of ladies' hair, love-notes treasured mechanically, not from amorous sentiment, but perhaps from some vague idea that they might be of use if those who gave the locks or wrote the notes should be raised in fortune, and could buy back the memorials of shame. Diving amidst these miscellaneous documents and which he stands. He looks round, to-night: - plague on it, where is the policeman is baffled, the coast the other blackguard's direction? clear. He steals forth, and pauses Ah, here-" And he extracted from under the same gaslight as that the thievish scrawls a peculiarly under which Guy Darrell had thievish-looking hieroglyph. Now, paused before-under the same gas- as he lifts it up to read by the gaslight, light, under the same stars. From survey him well. Do you not know some recess in his rags he draws him? Is it possible? What! the forth a large, distained, distended brilliant sharper! The ruffian expocketbook - last relic of sprucer | quisite! Jasper Losely! Can it be? days - leather of dainty morocco, Once before, in the fields of Fawley, once elaborately tooled, patent we beheld him out at elbows, seedy, springs, fairy lock, fit receptacle shabby, ragged. But then it was for bank-notes, billets-doux, memo- the decay of a foppish spendthriftranda of debts of honour, or pleasur- clothes distained, ill-assorted, yet, able engagements. Now how worn, still of fine cloth; shoes in holes, tarnished, greasy, rapscallion - like, yet still pearl-coloured brodequins. the costly bauble! Filled with what But now it is the decay of no fopmotley unloyable contents - stale pish spendthrift; the rags are not of fine cloth : the tattered shoes are not piété, pledges never henceforth to brodequins. The man has fallen far below the politer grades of knavery, in which the sharper affects the beau. And the countenance, as we last saw it, if it had lost much of its earlier beauty, was still incontestably handsome. What with vigour, and health, and animal spirits, then on the aspect still lingered light; now, from corruption, the light itself was gone. In that herculean constitution excess of all kinds had at length forced its ravage, and the ravage was visible in the ruined face. The once sparkling eye was dull and bloodshot. The colours of the cheek, once clear and vivid, to which fiery drink had only sent the blood in a warmer glow, were now of a leaden dulness, relieved but by broken streaks of angry red-like treasures, the prowler's hand rested gleams of flame struggling through on some old letters, in clerk-like gathered smoke. The profile, once fair caligraphy, tied round with a sharp and delicate like Apollo's, was dirty string, and on them, in an- now confused in its swollen outline; other and fresher writing, a scrap a few years more, and it would be that contained an address-"Samuel gross as that of Silenus-the nostrils. Adolphus Poole, Esq., Alhambra distended with incipient carbuncles, Villa, Regent's Park," "To-mor- which betray the gnawing fang that row, Nix my Dolly; to-morrow," alcohol fastens into the liver. Evil muttered the tatterdemalion; "but passions had destroyed the outline a Cupid's bow. The sideling, lowering, villanous expression which had formerly been but occasional, was now habitual and heightened. It was the look of the bison before it gores. It is true, however, that even yet on the countenance there lingered the trace of that lavish favour bestowed on it by nature. An artist would still have said, "How handsome that ragamuffin must have been!" And true is it also, that there was yet that about the bearing of the man, which contrasted his squalor, and seemed to say that he had not been born to wear rags, and loiter at midnight amongst the haunts of thieves, Nay, I am not sure that you would have been as incredulous now, if told that the wild outlaw before you had some claim by birth or by nurture to the rank of gentleman. as you would, had you seen the gay spendthrift in his gaudy day. For then he seemed below, and now he seemed above, the grade in which he took place. And all this made his aspect yet more sinister, and the impression that he was dangerous yet more profound. Muscular strength often remains to a powerful frame long after the constitution is undermined, and Jasper Losely's frame was still that of a formidable athlete: nay, its strength was vet more apparent now that the shoulders and limbs had increased in bulk, than when it was halfdisguised in the lissom symmetry of exquisite proportion - less active, less supple, less capable of endurance, but with more crushing weight in its rush or its blow. It was the figure in which brute force seems so to predominate that in a savage state it would have worn a crownthe figure which secures command and authority in all societies where force alone gives the law. Thus, less features that seemed trying to

of the once beautiful lips, arched as under the gaslight and under the stars, stood the terrible animal-a strong man embruted-" Souviens-TOI DE TA GABRIELLE." - There, still uneffaced, though the gold threads are all tarnished and ragged. are the ominous words on the silk of the she-devil's love-token! But Jasper has now inspected the direction on the paper he held to the lamp-light, and, satisfying himself that he was in the right quarter, restored the paper to the bulky distended pocketbook, and walked sullenly on towards the court from which had emerged the policeman who had crossed his prowling chase.

"It is the most infernal shame," said Losely between his grinded teeth. "that I should be driven to these wretched dens for a lodging. while that man, who ought to feel bound to maintain me, should be rolling in wealth, and cottoned up in a palace. But he shall fork out. Sophy must be hunted up. I will clothe her in rags like these. She shall sit at his street-door. I will shame the miserly hunks. But how track the girl? Have I no other hold over him? Can I send Dolly Poole to him? How addled my brains are !- want of food-want of sleep. Is this the place? Peuh !-"

Thus murmuring, he now reached the arch of the court, and was swallowed up in its gloom. A few strides. and he came into a square open space only lighted by the skies. A. house, larger than the rest, which were of the meanest order, stood somewhat back, occupying nearly one side of the quadrangle - old dingy, dilapidated. At the door of this house stood another man, applying his latch-key to the lock. As Losely approached, the man turned quickly, half in fear, half in menace-a small, very thin, impishlooking man, with peculiarly restrun away from his face. Thin as he and condescend to this rat-hole for was, he looked all skin and no bones a night or so. Let me in-knock up -a goblin of a man whom it would somebody-break open the lardernot astonish you to hear could creep I want to eat - I am famished-I through a keyhole. Seeming still should have eaten you by this time. more shadowy and impalpable by his slight, thin, sable dress, not of cloth, but a sort of stuff like alpaca. Nor was that dress ragged, nor, as seen but in starlight, did it look worn or shabby; still you bad but to glance at the creature to feel that it was a child in the same Family of Night as the ragged felon that staircase on one side; facing it, a towered by its side. The two outlaws stared at each other. "Cutts!" said Losely, in the old rollicking voice, but in a hoarser, rougher key-"Cutts, my boy, here I am; welcome me!"

"What! General Jas.!" returned Cutts, in a tone which was not without a certain respectful awe, and then proceeded to pour out a series of questions in a mysterious language, which may be thus translated and abridged: "How long have you been in England? how has it fared with you? you seem very badly off? coming here to hide? nothing very bad, I hope? what is it?"

Jasper answered in the same language, though with less practised mastery of it-and with that constitutional levity which, whatever the time or circumstance, occasionally gave a strange sort of wit, or queer. uncanny, devil-me-care vein of drollery, to his modes of expression.

"Three months of the worst luck man ever had-a row with the gensd'armes - long story-three of our pals seized-affair of the galleys for them, I suspect-French frogs can't seize me-fricasseed one or two of them - broke away - crossed the country-reached the coast-found an honest smuggler - landed off Sussex with a few other kegs of brandy - remembered you - pre- the swell fellows who hold their club served the address you gave me- here, General?" asked Cutts; "'tis only there's nothing on your bones.

The little man opened the doora passage black as Erebus, me your hand, General." Jasper was led through the pitchy gloom for a few yards; then the guide found a gas-cock, and the place broke suddenly into light. A dirty narrow sort of lobby, in which an open door showed a long sanded parlour, like that in public-houses-several tables. benches, the walls whitewashed, but adorned with sundry ingenious designs made by charcoal or the smoked ends of clay-pipes. A strong smell of stale tobacco and of gin and rum. Another gaslight, swinging from the centre of the ceiling, sprang into light as Cutts touched the tap-cock. "Wait here," said the guide. "I will go and get you some supper." "And some brandy," said Jasper. " Of course."

The brave threw himself at length on one of the tables, and, closing his eyes, moaned. His vast strength had become acquainted with physical pain. In its stout knots and fibres, aches and sharp twinges, the dragonteeth of which had been sown years ago in revels or brawls, which then seemed to bring but innocuous joy and easy triumph, now began to gnaw and grind. But when Cutts reappeared with coarse viands and the brandy bottle. Jasper shook off the sense of pain, as does a wounded wild beast that can still devour; and after regaling fast and ravenously. he emptied half the bottle at a draught, and felt himself restored and fresb.

"Shall you fling yourself amongst a bad trade, every year it gets worse, | dodge ! She snubs and cows me, Or have you not some higher game in your eye?"

"I have higher game in my eye. One bird I marked down this very night. But that may be slow work, and uncertain. I have in this pocketbook a bank to draw upon meanwhile." "How?-forged French billets de banque ?-dangerous."

"Pooh!-better than that-letters which prove theft against a respectable rich man."

"Ah, you expect hush-money?" "Exactly so. I have good friends in London."

"Among them, I suppose, that affectionate 'adopted mother,' who would have kept you in such order."

"Thousand thunders! I hope not. I am not a superstitious man, but I fear that woman as if she were a witch, and I believe she is one. You remember black Jean, whom we call Sans-culotte. He would have filled a churchyard with his own brats for a five-franc piece; but he would not have crossed a churchyard alone at night for a thousand Naps. Well. that woman to me is what a churchyard was to black Jean. No; if she is in London, I have but to go to her house and say, 'Food, shelter, money;' and I would rather ask Jack Ketch for a rope." 1

"How do you account for it, General? She does not beat youshe is not your wife. I have seen many a stout fellow, who would stand fire without blinking, show the white feather at a scold's tongue. But then he must be spliced to her-" and frightens me out of my wits, Cutts. For I do believe that the witch is determined to have me. body and soul, and to marry me some day in spite of myself, Cutts, And if ever you see me about to be clutched in those horrible paws. poison me with ratsbane, or knock me on the head, Cutts."

The little man laughed a little laugh, sharp and elritch, at the strange cowardice of the stalwart daredevil. But Jasper did not echo the laugh.

"Hush!" he said, timidly, "and let me have a bed, if you can; I have not slept in one for a week, and my nerves are shaky."

The imp lighted a candle-end at the gas-lamp, and conducted Losely up the stairs to his own sleepingroom, which was less comfortless than might be supposed. He resigned his bed to the wanderer, who flung himself on it, rags and all. But sleep was no more at his command than it is at a king's.

"Why the - did you talk of that witch?" he cried peevishly to Cutts, who was composing himself to rest on the floor. "I swear I fancy I feel her sitting on my chest like a nightmare." He turned with a vehemence which shook the walls, and wrapt the coverlid round him, plunging his head into its folds. Strange though it seem to the novice in human nature-to Jasper Losely the woman who had so long lived but for one object-viz. to save him from the gibbet, was as his evil genius, his haunting fiend. He had conceived a profound terror of her, "Cutts, that griflin does not scold from the moment he perceived that -she preaches. She wants to make she was resolutely bent upon making me spooney, Cutts-she talks of my him honest. He had broken from young days, Cutts-she wants to her years ago-fled-resumed his blight me into what she calls an evil courses-hid himself from her honest man, Cutts; - the virtuous -in vain. Wherever he wentthe police, not her. Hunger had gratitude. The moment he came in often forced him to accept her aid. sight of her stern, haggard face-As soon as he received it, he hid her piercing lurid eyes-the moment from her again, hurving himself he heard her slow, dry voice in some deeper and deeper in the mud, like such sentences as these - "Again a persecuted tench. He associated you come to me in your trouble, her idea with all the ill-luck that and ever shall. Am I not still as had befallen him. Several times your mother, but with a wife's some villanous scheme on which he fidelity, till death us do part? There had counted to make his fortune is the portrait of what you were—had been baffled in the most mys-look at it, Jasper. Now turn to the terious way; and just when haf- glass-see what you are. Think of fled-and there seemed no choice the fate of Gabrielle Desmarets! but to cut his own throat or But for me, what, long since, had some one else's - up turned grim | been your own? But I will save Arabella Crane, in the iron-grey you-I have sworn it. You shall gown, and with the iron-grey ring- he wax in these hands at last;"lets-hatefully, awfully beneficentoffering food, shelter, gold-and some demoniacal, honourable work. Often had he been in imminent peril from watchful law or treacherous accomplice. She had warned and saved than a Thug would have lifted his him, as she had saved him from the fell Gabrielle Desmarets, who, unable to bear the sentence of penal not resist a belief that the life of servitude, after a long process defended with astonishing skill, and enlisting the romantic sympathies -that, were she to die, he should of young France, had contrived to perish in some ghastly and preterescape into another world hy means of a subtle poison concealed about her distinguée person, and which she had prepared years ago with her own bloodless hands, and no doubt scientifically tested its effect on others. The cohra capella is gone from which he had so narrowly at last! " Souviens-toi de ta Gabrielle," O Jasper Losely! But why tinue to watch over him whom she no longer professed to love-how she should thus have acquired the Satan in his own way was to Jasper gift of ubiquity and the power to Losely a supreme blessing compared save him-Jasper Losely could not conjecture. The whole thing seemed espionage, with its relentless eye and to him weird and supernatural, restraining hand. Alas and alas! Most truly did he say that she had deem not this perversity unnatural cowed him. He had often longed to in that headstrong self-destroyer! strangle her; when absent from her, How many are there whom not a there went she. He might baffle had often resolved upon that act of the moment that voice thus claimed and insisted on redeeming him, the ruffian felt a cold shudder - his courage oozed-he could no more have nerved his arm against her against the dire goddess of his murderous superstition. Jasper could this dreadful protectress was, somehow or other, made essential to his natural expiation. But for the last few months he had, at length, escaped from her-diving so low, so deep into the mud, that even her net could not mesh him. Hence, perhaps, the imminence of the perils escaped-hence the utterness of his present destitution. But man, how-Arabella Crane should thus con- ever vile, whatever his peril, whatever his destitution, was born free, and loves liberty. Liberty to go to to that henignant compassionate grim hard-featured Arabella Crane, as if it were an evil genius! How but the long-suffering, divine, omni- many are there who fear nothing so scient, gentle Providence itself, seeks much as the being made good in to warn, to aid, to save - and is spite of themselves?-how many? shunned, and loathed, and fled from, -who can count them?

CHAPTER VI.

The public man needs but one patron-vis. THE LUCKY MOMENT.

Guy Darrell, Esq., for the season."

list of Fashionable Arrivals !- the name of a plain commoner imbedded in the amber which glitters with so many coronets and stars! Yet such is England, with all its veneration for titles, that the eves of the public passed indifferently over the rest of that obronicle of illustrious " whereabouts," to rest with interest, curiosity, speculation, on the unemblazoned name which but a day hand!"

significance to Alban Morley's hints, had addressed to them, to which he the public are out of temper with

"AT his house in Carlton Gardens, had so slightly referred in his conversation with Alban. True, the Simple insertion in the pompous speech was short: true it touched but little on passing topics of political interest-rather alluding, with modesty and terseness, to the contests and victories of a former day. But still, in the few words there was the swell of the old clarionthe wind of the Paladin's horn which woke Fontarabian echoes.

It is astonishing how capricious, how sudden, are the changes in value of a public man. All depends before had seemed slipped out of upon whether the public want, or date-obsolete as that of an actor believe they want, the man; and who figures no more in play-bills, that is a question upon which the Unquestionably the sensation ex- public do not know their own minds cited was due, in much, to the a week before; nor do they always "ambiguous voices" which Colonel keep in the same mind, when made Morley had disseminated through- up, for a week together. If they out the genial atmosphere of club- do not want a man-if he do not rooms. "Arrived in London for the hit the taste, nor respond to the season!"-he, the orator, once so exigency of the time-whatever his famous, long so forgotten, who had eloquence, his abilities, his virtues. been out of the London world for they push him aside, or ory him the space of more than half a gene- down. Is he wanted?-does the ration. "Why now?-why for the mirror of the moment reflect his season?"-Quoth the Colonel: "He image?-that mirror is an intense is still in the prime of life as a magnifier; his proportions swellpublic man, and -a CRISIS is at they become gigantic. At that moment the public wanted some man : But that which gave weight and and the instant the hint was given, "Why not Guy Darrell?" was the report in the newspapers of Darrell was seized upon as the man Guy Darrell's visit to his old consti- wanted. It was one of those times tuents, and of the short speech he in our Parliamentary history when all parties-when recognised leaders genius, rose to a premium above its market price in times of tranquillity and tape. Without effort of his own-by the mere force of the undercurrent - Guy Darrell was thrown up from oblivion into note. He could not form a cabinet-certainly not; but he might help to bring a cabinet together, reconcile jarring elements, adjust disputed some high place, influence its councils, and delight a public weary of the oratory of the day, with the eloquence of a former race. For the public is ever a laudator temporis the orators immediately before it. were those authors and orators Homers and Ciceros, would still shake a disparaging head, and talk of these degenerate days, as Homer or Miltiades routed Asian armaman !"

he is! make the most of him.

The house in Carlton Gardens is have contrived to damage them- prepared, the establishment mounselves-when a Cabinet is shaking, ted. Thither flock all the Viponts and the public neither care to de- -nor they alone; all the chiefs of all stroy nor to keep it :- a time, too, parties-nor they alone; all the when the country seemed in some notabilities of our grand metropolis. danger, and when, mere men of Guy Darrell might be startled at business held unequal to the emer- his own position; but he compregency, whatever name suggested hended its nature, and it did not associations of vigour, eloquence, discompose his nerves. He knew public life well enough to be aware how much the popular favour is the creature of an accident. By chance he had nicked the time: had he thus come to town the season before, he might have continued obscure, a man like Guy Darrell not being wanted then. Whether with or without design, his bearing confirmed and extended the effect questions, take in such government produced by his reappearance. Gracious, but modestly reservedhe spoke little, listened beautifully. Many of the questions which agitated all around him had grown un into importance since his day of acti, and whatever the authors or action; nor in his retirement had he traced their progressive development, with their changeful effects upon men and parties. But a man who has once gone deeply into practical politics might sleep in the Cave himself talked ages before Leonidas of Trophonius for twenty years, and stood in the pass of Thermopyle, find, on waking, very little to learn. Darrell regained the level of the ments at Marathon. Guy Darrell day, and seized upon all the strong belonged to a former race. The points on which men were divided. fathers of those young Members with the rapidity of a prompt and rising now into fame, had quoted comprehensive intellect-his judgto their sons his pithy sentences, ment perhaps the clearer from the his vivid images; and added, as Fox freshness of long repose, and the added when quoting Burke, "but composure of dispassionate survey. you should have heard and seen the When partisans wrangled as to what should have been done, Darrell Heard and seen the man! But was silent; when they asked what there he was again !- come up as should be done, out came one of his from a grave-come up to the public terse sentences, and a knot was cut. just when such a man was wanted. Meanwhile it is true this man, Wanted how?-wanted where? Oh, round whom expectations grouped somehow and somewhere! There and rumour buzzed, was in neither House of Parliament; but that was a detriment to his consequence, very long; he must decide at all Important constituencies, anticipating a vacancy, were already on the Once he was seen in the arena of look-out for him; a smaller consti- his old triumphs, on the benches tuency, in the interim, Carr Vipont undertook to procure him any day. There was always a Vipont ready to accept something-even the Chiltern Hundreds. But Darrell, not without reason, demurred at re-entering the House of Commons after an absence of seventeen years. He had left it with one of those rare reputations which no wise man likes rashly to imperil. The Viponts He would certainly be more useful in the Commons than the Lords, but still in the Lords he would be of great use. They would want a debating lord, perhaps a lord acquainted with law in the coming CRISIS :- if he preferred the peerage? Darrell demurred still. The man's modesty was insufferable-his style of speaking might not suit that august assembly; and as to law-he could never now be a law lord-he should be but a ci-devant advocate, affecting the part of a judicial amateur.

In short, without declining to reenter public life, seeming, on the contrary, to resume all his interest in it, Darrell contrived with admirable dexterity to elude for the present all overtures pressed upon him, and even to convince his admirers, not only of his wisdom but of his patriotism in that reticence. For certainly he thus managed to exercise a very considerable influencehis advice was more sought, his suggestions more heeded, and his power in reconciling certain rival jealousies was perhaps greater than would have been the case if he had actually entered either House of Parliament, of one section of a party. Never- within that secret mind? Is there rather a delay to his energies than | theless, such suspense could not last devoted to strangers distinguished by the Speaker's order. There, recognised by the older members, eagerly gazed at by the younger, Guy Darrell listened throughout a long field-night, to voices that must have roused from forgotten graves, kindling and glorious memories; voices of those -veterans now-by whose side he had once struggled for some cause which he had then, in the necessary exaggeration of all honest enthusiasm, identified with a nation's life-blood. Voices too of the old antagonists over whose routed arguments he had marched triumphant amidst applauses that the next day rang again through England from side to side. Hark, the very man with whom, in the old battle-days, he had been the most habitually pitted, is speaking now ! His tones are embarrassed-his argument confused. Does he know who listens yonder! Old members think so-smile, whisper each other. and glance significantly where Darrell sits.

Sits, as became him, tranquil, respectful, intent, seemingly, perhaps really, unconscious of the sensation he excites. What an eye for an orator! how like the eye in a portrait: it seems to fix on each other eye that seeks it-steady, fascinating. You distant members, behind the Speaker's chair, at the far distance, feel the light of that eye travel towards them. How lofty and massive, among all those rows of human heads, seems that forehead, bending slightly down, with and thrown himself exclusively into the dark strong line of the weighty the ranks, not only of one party, but eyebrow! But what is passing their eagerness to renew the strife? hazard a single guess as to the Is that interest in the Hour's de- thoughts beneath that marble bate feigned or real? Impossible forehead-as to the emotions within for him who gazed upon that face to the heart over which, in old say. And that eye would have senatorial fashion, the arms were seemed to the gazer to read him- folded with so conventional an self through and through to the ease, mournfulness in the retrospect? is | heart's core, long ere the gazer could

CHAPTER VIL

Darrell and Lionel.

DARBELL had received Lionel with of the true bloom that brightens of some evident embarrassment, which the true expression that redeems, soon yielded to affectionate warmth. those defects which it invites the He took to the young man whose sun to limn, that we shall never fortunes he had so improved; he judge human nature aright, if we felt that with the improved fortunes do not set out in life with our gaze the young man's whole being was on its fairest beauties, and our improved ;-assured position, early belief in its latent good. In a word, commune with the best social we should begin with the Heroic, if oircles, in which the equality of we would learn the Human. But fashion smooths away all disparities though to himself Lionel thus in rank, had softened in Lionel secretly prescribed a certain supemuch of the wayward and morbid riority of type, to be sedulously irritability of his boyish pride; but aimed at, even if never actually the high spirit, the generous love of attained, he was wholly without independence, the scorn of mer- pedantry and arrogance towards his cenary calculation, were strong as own contemporaries. From this he ever; these were in the grain of his was saved not only by good-nature. nature. In common with all who animal spirits, frank hardihood, but in youth aspire to be one day noted by the very affluence of ideas which from "the undistinguishable many," animated his tongue, coloured his Lionel had formed to himself a cer- language, and, whether to young or tain ideal standard, above the ordi- old, wise or dull, made his conversanary level of what the world is tion racy and original. He was a contented to call honest, or esteem delightful companion; and if he had olever. He admitted into his esti- taken much instruction from those mate of life the heroic element, not older and wiser than himself, he so undesirable even in the most prac-tical point of view, for the world is so in the habit of decrying—of dis-believing in high motives and pure emotions—of daugerreotyping itself ould make an old man's gleanwith all its ugliest wrinkles, stripped ings from experience seem a young he had, of course - chiefly the heart, youth of soul. Lithe and supfaults common at his age; amongst | ple as he moved before you, with the them, perhaps, the most dange- eye to which light or dew sprung rous were-firstly, carelessness in at once from a nature vibrating to money matters; secondly, a dis- every lofty, every tender thought, he taste for advice in which pru- seemed more than young-the indence was visibly predominant, carnation of youth. His tastes were not in reality extravagant; but money slipped through his hands, leaving little to show for on the important man, he contrived it; and when his quarterly allowance became due, ample though it was - too ample, perhaps - debts wholly forgotten started up to seize hold of it. And debts as yet being manageable, were not regarded with sufficient horror. Paid or put aside, as the case might be, they were merely looked upon as bores. Youth is in danger till it learn to look noon them as furies. For advice, he took it with pleasure, when clothed with elegance and art -when it addressed ambitionwhen it exalted the loftier virtues. But advice, practical and prosy, went in at one car and out at the other. In fact, with many talents, he had yet no adequate ballast of common sense; and if ever he get enough to steady his bark through life's trying voyage, the necessity of poetic attributes of his varying, so much dull weight must be forcibly stricken home less to his reason than his imagination or his not taking pains to conceal. Hearheart. But if, somehow or other, he get it not, I will not insure his vessel.

the artist. He had YOUTH-real man who had not?

man's guesses into truth. Faults | youth - youth of mind, youth of

Darrell took to him at once. A midst, all the engagements crowded to see Lionel daily. And what may seem strange, Guy Darrell felt more at home with Lionel Haughton than with any of his own contemporaries-than even with Alban Morley. To the last, indeed, he opened speech with less reserve of certain portions of the past, or of certain projects in the future. But still, even there, he adopted a tone of half-playful, half-mournful satire, which might be in itself disguise. Alban Morley, with all his good qualities, was a man of the world: as a man of the world. Guy Darrell talked to him. But it was only a very small part of Guy Darrell the Man, of which the world could say " mine."

To Lionel, he let out, as if involuntarily, the more amiable, tender, complex, uncomprehended character; not professedly confiding, but ing what worldlings would call "Sentiment" in Lionel, he seemed to glide softly down to Lionel's I know not if Lionel Haughton own years, and talk "sentiment" in had genius; he never assumed that return. After all, this skilled lawyer, he had; but he had something more this noted politician, had a great like genius than that prototype- dash of the boy still in him. Reader, RESOLVE-of which he boasted to did you ever meet a really clever

CHAPTER VIII

Saith a very homely proverb (pardon its vulgarity), "You cannot make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." But a sow's ear is a much finer work of art than a silk purse, And grand, indeed, the mechanician who could make a sow's ear out of a silk purse, or conjure into creatures of flesh and blood the sarconet and fulle of a Loudon drawing-room.

"MAMMA," asked Honoria Carr her, had she lived to enjoy it. But for Mrs. Darrell ?"

"She was not in our set, my dear." answered Lady Selina. "The Vipont Crookes are just one of those connections with which, though, of course, one is civil to all connections, one is more or less intimate. according as they take after the Viponts or after the Crookes. Poor woman! she died just before Mr. Darrell entered Parliament and appeared in society. But I should say she was not an agreeable person. Not nice," added Lady Selina, after a pause, and conveying a world of meaning in that conventional monosyllable. "I suppose she was very accomplished-very clever?"

" Ouite the reverse, my dear. Mr. Darrell was exceedingly young when he married - scarcely of age. She was not the sort of woman to suit him."

"But at least she must have been very much attached to him - very proud of him?"

Lady Selina glanced aside from her work, and observed her daughter's face, which evinced an animation not usual to a young lady of a breeding so lofty, and a mind so well disciplined.

"I don't think," said Lady Selina, fame and fortune would have raised skirts of good society, the great par-

Vipont, "what sort of a person was a few years after her marriage they were very poor; and though his rise at the bar was sudden and brilliant, he was long wholly absorbed in his profession, and lived in Bloomsbury. Mrs. Darrell was not proud of that. The Crookes are generally fine-give themselves airs-marry into great houses if they can-but we can't naturalise them-they always remain Crookes - useful connections, very! Carr says we have not a more useful -but third-rate, my dear. All the Crookes are bad wives, because they are never satisfied with their own homes, but are always trying to get into great people's homes. Not very long before she died, Mrs. Darrell took her friend and relation, Mrs. Lyndsay, to live with her. I suspect it was not from affection, or any great consideration for Mrs. Lyndsay's circumstances (which were indeed those of actual destitution, till-thanks to Mr. Darrellshe won her lawsuit), but simply because she looked to Mrs. Lyndsay to get her into our set. Mrs. Lyndsay was a great favourite with all of us, charming manners - perfectly correct, too - thorough Vipont thorough gentlewoman-but artful! Oh. so artful! She humoured poor Mrs. Darrell's absurd vanity; but she took care not to injure herself. "that she was proud of him. She Of course, Darrell's wife, and a Viwould have been proud of his sta- pont-though only a Vipont Crooke tion, or rather of that to which his -had free passport into the out-ties, and so forth. But there it | natural, By-the-bye, I must write stopped; even I should have been compromised if I had admitted into our set a woman who was bent on compromising herself. Handsome -in a bad style-not the Vipont tournure; and not only silly and flirting, but-(we are alone, keep the secret)-decidedly vulgar, my dear."

"You amaze me! How such a man-" Honoria stopped, colouring up to the temples.

"Clever men," said Lady Selina, "as a general rule, do choose the -(a small party of cousins) - so oddest wives! The cleverer a man is, the more easily, I do believe, a woman can take him in. However, to do Mr. Darrell justice, he has been taken in only once. After Mrs. Darrell's death, Mrs. Lyndsay. I suspect, tried her chance, but failed. Of course, she could not actually stay in the same house with a widower who was then young, and who had only to get rid of a wife to whom one was forced to be shy, in order to be received into our set with open arms; and, in short to be of the very best monde. Mr. Darrell came into Parliament immensely rich (a legacy from an old East Indian, besides his own professional savings)-took the house he has now, close by us. Mrs. Lyndsay was obliged to retire to a cottage at Fulham. But as she professed to be a second mother to poor Matilda Darrell, she contrived to be very much at Carlton Gardens; her daughter Caroline was nearly always there, profiting by caught Darrell-but your paps said 'No,' and he was right, as he always is, would have been an excellent wife a gesture of calm disdain. to a public man-so popular-knew the world so well - never made enemies till she made an enemy of Vipont. "She'll never marry a to Caroline. Sweet creature! but how absurd, shutting herself up as if she were fretting for Montfort! That's so like her mother-heartless, but full of propriety."

Here Carr Vipont and Colonel Morley entered the room. "We have just left Darrell," said Carr : "he will dine here to-day, to meet our cousin Alban. I have asked his cousin, young Houghton, and * * * * and . . . vour cousins, Selina lucky to find Darrell disengaged." "I ventured to promise," said the Colonel, addressing Honoria in an under voice, "that Darrell should hear you play Beethoven."

HONOBIA.- "Is Mr. Darrell so fond of music, then?"

COLONEL MORLEY .- "One would not have thought it. He keeps a secretary at Fawley who plays the flute. There's something very interesting about Darrell. I wish you could hear his ideas on marriage and domestic life - more freshness o heart than in the young men one meets nowadays. It may be prejudice: but it seems to me that the young fellows of the present race, if more sober and staid than we were. are sadly wanting in character and spirit-no warm blood in their veins, But I should not talk thus to a demoiselle who has all those young fellows at her feet."

"Oh," said Lady Selina, overhearing, and with a half laugh, "Honoria thinks much as you do: Matilda's masters; and I did think she finds the young men so insipid that Mrs. Lyndsay would have -all like one another-the same set phrases."

"The same stereotyped ideas," Nevertheless, Mrs. Lyndsay added Honoria, moving away with poor dear Montfort; but that was fool."

> "A very superior mind hers," whispered the Colonel to Carr

Guy Darrell was very pleasant at | their distinguished connection. By "the small family dinner-party." some accident, amongst those in-Carr was always popular in his man- vited there were but few young ners-the true old House of Com- single ladies; and by some other mons manner, which was very like accident, those few were all plain. that of a gentlemanlike public Honoria Vipont was unequivocally school. Lady Selina, as has been the belle of the room. It could not said before, in her own family but be observed that Darrell seemed circle was natural and genial struck with her-talked with her Young Carr, there, without his more than with any other lady; and wife, more pretentious than his when she went to the piano, and father-being a Lord of the Admiralty - felt a certain awe of Dar- in which music seems to have got rell, and spoke little, which was into a knot that only fingers the much to his own credit, and to the most artful can unravel, Darrell general conviviality. The other members of the symposium, besides Lady Selina, Honoria, and a younger sister, were but Darrell, Lionel, and Lady Selina's two cousins; elderly to look for him, he was gone. peers - one with the garter, the other in the cabinet-jovial men him. The gay young man went, who had been wild fellows once in the same mess-room, and still joked at each other whenever they met as they met now. Lionel, who remembered Vance's description of Lady Selina, and who had since heard her number. spoken of in society as a female despot who carried to perfection the arts by which despots flourish, with deceive-an Aurungzebe in pettisuch portraiture with the goodhumoured, motherly woman who talked to him of her home, her husband, her children, with open fondness and becoming pride, and clever as the world cruelly gave out, her talk its kindliness, and the resi- well-educated Honoria. newing their acquaintance with again-this time to another young played that great air of Beethoven's, remained in his seat aloof and alone. listening, no doubt, with ravished attention. But just as the air ended, and Honoria turned round

Lionel did not linger long after thence, to one of those vast crowds which seemed convened for a practical parody of Mr. Bentham's famous proposition-contriving the smallest happiness for the greatest

It was a very good house, belonging to a very great person. Colonel Morley had procured an invitation majesty to impose, and caresses to for Lionel, and said, "Go; you should be seen there." Colonel Morley had coats—was sadly at a loss to reconcile passed the age of growing into society -no such cares for the morrow could add a cubit to his conventional stature. One amongst a group of other young men by the doorway, Lionel beheld Darrell, who had arrived bewho, far from being so formidably fore him, listening to a very handsome young lady, with an attention seemed to Lionel rather below par quite as earnest as that which had in her understanding; strike from gratified the superior mind of the A very due was very like twaddle. After handsome young lady certainly, but dinner, various members of the not with a superior mind, nor sup-Vipont family dropped in -asked posed hitherto to have found young impromptu by Carr or by Lady gentlemen "insipid." Doubtless Selina, in hasty three - cornered she would henceforth do so. A few notes, to take that occasion of re- minutes after, Darrell was listening lady, generally called "fast." If his | say he is to return to Parliament. attentions to her were not marked, and have a place in the Cabinet. hers to him were. She rattled on to . . . No! he has no children him volubly, laughed, pretty hoyden, living-very natural heshould marry at her own sallies, and seemed at last again. . . . A nephew!-you are so to fascinate him by her gay spirits that he sate down by her side; and the playful smile on his lips-lips that had learned to be so gravely firm-showed that he could enter still into the mirth of childhood; for surely to the time-worn man the fast young lady must have seemed but a Houghton now. . . . Hush-" giddy child. Lionel was amused. was now drawn from Darrell himtheme.

her pretty-I don't. . . . They imitated. That evening he felt as quite mistaken. Young Haughton is no nephew-a very distant connection-could not expect to be the heir. . . It was given out though, at Paris. The Duchess thought so, and so did Lady Jane. They'll not be so civil to young

Lionel, wishing to hear no more, Could this be the austere recluse glided by, and penetrated farther whom he had left in the shades of into the throng. And then, as he Fawley? Guy Darrell, at his years, proceeded, with those last words on with his dignified repute, the object his ear, the consciousness came upon of so many node, and becks, and him that his position had undergone wreathed smiles-could he descend a change. Difficult to define it; to to be that most frivolous of charac- an ordinary bystander, people would ters, a male coquet? Was he in have seemed to welcome him corearnest - was his vanity duped? dially as ever. The gradations of Looking again, Lionel saw in his respect in polite society are so exkinsman's face a sudden return of quisitely delicate, that it seems only the sad despondent expression which by a sort of magnetism that one had moved his own young pity in knows from day to day whether one the solitudes of Fawley. But in a has risen or declined. A man has moment the man roused himself- lost high office, patronage, power, the sad expression was gone. Had never, perhaps, to regain them. the girl's merry laugh again chased People don't turn their backs on it away? But Lionel's attention him; their smiles are as gracious, their hands as flatteringly extended. self to the observations murmured But that man would be dull as a round him, of which Darrell was the rhinoceros if he did not feel-as every one who accosts him feels-"Yes, he is bent on marrying that he has descended in the ladder. again! I have it from Alban So with all else. Lose even your Morley-immense fortune-and so fortune, it is not the next day in a young-looking, any girl might fall London drawing-room that your in love with such eyes and forehead; friends look as if you were going to besides, what a jointure he could ask them for five pounds. Wait a settle! Do look at that girl, year or so for that. But if they have Flora Vyvyan, trying to make a fool just heard you are ruined, you will of him. She can't appreciate that feel that they have heard it, let them kind of man, and she would not be bow ever so courteously, smile ever caught by his money-does not want so kindly. Lionel at Paris, in the it. . . . I wonder she is not last year or so, had been more than afraid of him. He is certainly quiz- fashionable: he had been the fashion zing her. . . . The men think -courted run after, petted, quoted, an author may feel who has been | made clear to it. From the faces the rage, and without fault of his round him there fell that glamour own is so no more. The rays that hy which the amour propre is held had gilt him had gone back to the captive in large assemblies, where orb that lent. And they who were the amour propre is flattered. "Magmost genial still to Lionel Haugh- nificent, intelligent audience," thinks ton, were those who still most re-spected thirty-five thousand pounds party," murmurs the worshipped a vear-in Guy Darrell !

that he felt galled. But in his mouths: let the party neglect the wounded pride there was no mer- beauty to adore another, and straightcenary regret—only that sort of sick-way the "magnificent audience" is ness which comes to youth when the an "ignorant public," and the "de-beauty. Glamour! glamour! Let Lionel was angry with himself the audience yawn while the actor hollowness of worldly life is first lightful party" a "heartless world."

CHAPTER IX.

Escaped from a London Drawing-room, flesh once more tingles and blood flows-Guy Darrell explains to Liouel Haughton why he holds it a duty to be-an old fool.

the disenchanted rooms, and hreathed earth, 'I have done with thee;' to a long hreath of relief when he found Time, 'Thou hast nought to behimself in the friendless streets.

As he walked slow and thoughtful

"Give me your arm, my dear Lionel: I am tired out. What a lovely night! What sweet scorn in the eyes of those stars that we have neglected for you flaring lights."

pity? Is it but serene indifference?"

terpret; if scorn be present in our own hearts, it will be seen in the disc of Jupiter. Man, egotist though through all dreams, through all he be, exacts sympathy from all the creeds-thrills the sense of a link universe. Joyous, he says to the with Divinity. Never, therefore, sun, 'Life-giver, rejoice with me.' while conferring with Nature, is Grieving, he says to the moon, Man wholly alone, nor is she a sin-'Pensive one, thou sharest my sor-gle companion with uniform shape. row.' Hope for fame; a star is its Ever new, ever various, she can pass promise! Mourn for the dead; a from gay to severe-from fancy to

LIONEL HAUGHTON glided through | star is the land of reunion! Say to stow; and all Space cries aloud, ' The earth is a speck, thine inherion, he suddenly felt a hand upon his shoulder, turned, and saw Darrell. thou sighest. The discontent of a mortal is the instinct that proves thee immortal.' Thus construing Nature, Nature is our companion, our consoler. Benign as the playmate, she lends herself to our shift-LIONEL,-" Is it scorn? - is it ing humours. Serious as the teacher, she responds to the steadier inquiries of reason. Mystic and hallowed as DARRELL.-" As we ourselves in- the priestess, she keeps alive by dim oracles that spiritual yearning within us, in which, from savage to sagescience - quick as thought passes kinsman up the lofty stairs, into the from the dance of a leaf, from the tint of a rainbow, to the theory of motion, the problem of light. But lose Nature-forget or dismiss her -make companions, by hundreds, of men who ignore her, and I will not say with the poet, 'This is solitude.' But in the commune, what stale monotony, what weary sameness ! "

Thus Darrell continued to weave together sentence with sentence, the intermediate connection of meaning often so subtle, that when put down on paper it requires effort to discern it. But it was his peculiar gift to make clear when spoken, what in writing would seem obscure. Look, manner, each delicate accent in a voice wonderfully distinct in its unrivalled melody, all so aided the sense of mere words, that it is scarcely extravagant to say he might have talked an unknown language, and a listener would have understood. But, understood or not, those sweet intonations it was such delight to hear, that any one with nerves alive to music would have murmured, "Talk on for ever." And in this gift lay one main secret of the man's strange influence over all who came familiarly into his intercourse; so that if Darrell had ever bestowed confidential intimacy on any one not by some antagonistic idiosyncrasy steeled against its charm, and that intimacy had been withdrawn, a void never to be refilled must have been left in the life thus robbed.

Stopping at his door, as Lionel, rapt by the music, had forgotten the pain of the reverie so bewitchingly broken, Darrell detained the hand held out to him, and said, "No, not yet-I have something to say to you: come in; let me say it now."

same comfortless stately room that has been already described. When the servant closed the Darrell sank into a chair. Fixing his eyes upon Lionel with almost parental kindness, and motioning his young cousin to sit by his side. close, he thus began :-

"Lionel, before I was your age I was married-I was a father. I am lonely and childless now. My life has been moulded by a solemn obligation which so few could comprehend, that I scarce know a man living beside yourself to whom I would frankly confide it. Pride of family is a common infirmity-often petulant with the poor, often insolent with the rich; but rarely, perhaps, out of that pride do men construct a positive binding duty. which at all self-sacrifice should influence the practical choice of life. As a child, before my judgment could discern how much of vain superstition may lurk in our reverence for the dead, my whole heart was engaged in a passionate dream. which my waking existence became vowed to realise. My father !-my lip quivers, my eyes moisten as I recall him, even now,-my father !-I loved him so intensely !- the love of childhood how fearfully strong it is! All in him was so gentle, vet so sensitive - chivalry without its armour. I was his constant companion: he spoke to me unreservedly, as a poet to his muse. I wept at his sorrows-I chafed at his humiliations. He talked of ancestors as he thought of them; to him they were beings like the old Lares-not dead in graves, but images ever present on household hearths. Doubtless he exaggerated their worth—as their old importance. Obscure, indeed, in the annals of empire, their Lionel bowed his head, and in deeds and their power, their decline surprised conjecture followed his and fall. Not so thought he; they were to his eyes the moon-track in | House of Darrell needed wealth. the ocean of history-light on the and Parliamentary success, in it waves over which they had gleamed higher honours, often require - all the ocean elsewhere dark ! wealth-never gives it. It chanced With him thought I; as my father spoke, his child believed. But what to the eyes of the world was this inheritor of a vaunted name?-a thread- the numberless Viponts, had been bare, slighted, rustic pedant - no station in the very province in which to his own, on succeeding to tho mouldered away the last lowly dwelling-place of his line. By lineage high above most nobles, in position I went with this college acquainting, he had genius; but the studies at his villa near London, and thence to which they were devoted only to the country-house of the Vipont served yet more to impoverish his Crookes. I staid at the last two scanty means, and led rather to or three weeks. While there, I reridicule than to honour. Not a day ceived a letter from the elder Fairbrightened, and his voice blest me: and then rapidly continued :-

"I was fortunate at the university. That was a day when chiefs of party looked for recruits amongst young men who had given the emulation and assiduity. For stateswas dazzled but for one moment consultation with Fairthorn. There -I declined the next. The fallen seemed not a hope. Next morning that I had a college acquaintance with a young man named Vipont Crooke. His grandfather, one of compelled to add the name of Crooke property of some rich uncle, who was one of the numberless Crookes. below most veomen. He had learn- ance to visit the old Lord Montfort. but what I saw on his soft features thorn, my father's bailiff, entreating the smart of a fresh sting, the gnaw- me to come immediately to Fawley. ing of a new care. Thus, as a boy, hinting at some great calamity. feeling in myself a strength inspired | On taking leave of my friend and hy affection, I came to him, one day his family, something in the manner as he sate grieving, and kneeling to of his sister startled and pained me him, said, 'Father, courage yet a -an evident confusion, a burst of little while; I shall soon be man, tears - I know not what. I had and I swear to devote myself as man | never sought to win her affections. to revive the old fading race so I had an ideal of the woman I could prized by you : to rebuild the House love. It did not resemble her. that, hy you so loved, is loftier in On reaching Fawley, conceive the my eyes than all the heraldry of shock that awaited me. My father kings.' And my father's face was like one heart-stricken. The principal mortgagee was about to and I rose up-ambitious!" Darrell foreclose-Fawley about to pass for paused, heaved a short, quick sigh, ever from the race of the Darrells, I saw that the day my father was driven from the old house would be his last on earth. What means to save him?-how raise the pitiful sum - hut a few thousands - by proofs and won the first-fruits of which to release from the spoiler's gripe those barren acres which all manship then was deemed an art the lands of the Seymour or the which, like that of war, needs early Gower could never replace in my discipline. I had scarcely left col- poor father's eyes? My sole income lege when I was offered a seat in was a college fellowship, adequate to Parliament, hy the head of the all my wants, but useless for sale or Viponts, an old Lord Montfort. I loan. I spent the night in vain though somewhat coarse. With the consent of his parents he offered me £10,000. He hinted, in excuse for his bluntness, that, perhaps from motives of delicacy, if I felt a preference for his sister, I might not deem myself rich enough to propose, and-but it matters not what else he said. You foresee the rest. My father's life could be saved from despair - his beloved home be his shelter to the last. That dowry would more than cover the paltry not an hour to pause. I hastened had led me. But," said Darrell. deceive the young lady. I told her what was true: that I could not profess to her the love painted by romance-writers and poets; but that I loved no other, and that if she deigned to accept my hand, I should studiously consult her happiness and gratefully confide to her my own. I said also, what was trne, that if she married me, ours must be for some years a life of privation and struggle; that even the interest of her fortune must be devoted to my father while he lived, though every shilling of its capital would be settled on herself and her children. How I blessed her when she accepted me, despite my candour !- how earnestly I prayed that I might love and cherish, and requite her!" Darrell paused, in "And thank evident suffering. Heaven! I have nothing on that score wherewith to reproach myself. And the strength of that memory enabled me to bear and forbear more than otherwise would have been possible to my quick spirit, it, and my man's heart. My dear "I made, then, a promise; it is came a letter from young Vipont | father! his death was happy-his Crooke. It was manly and frank, home was saved—he never knew at what sacrifice to his son! He was gladdened by the first honours my his sister's hand, and a dowry of youth achieved. He was resigned to my choice of a profession, which, though contrary to his antique prejudices, that allowed to the representative of the Darrells no profession but the sword, still promised the wealth which would secure his name from perishing. He was credulous of my future, as if I had uttered not a vow, but a prediction. He had blest my union, without foreseeing its sorrows. He had emdebt upon the lands. I gave myself hraced my first-born-true, it was a girl, but it was one link onward back to the house to which fate from ancestors to posterity. And almost his last words were these: prondly, "do not think I was base 'You will restore the race-you will enough, even with such excuses, to revive the name! and my son's children will visit the antiquary's grave, and learn gratitude to him for all that his idle lessons taught to your healthier vigour.' And I answered: 'Father, your line shall not perish from the land; and when I am rich and great, and lordships spread far round the lowly hall that your life ennobled, I will say to your grandchildren, "Honour ve and your son's sons, while a Darrell yet treads the earth-honour him to whom I owe every thought which nerved me to toil for what you who come after me may enjoy."'

"And so the old man, whose life had been so smileless, died smiling."

By this time Lionel had stolen Darrell's hand into his own .- his heart swelling with childlike tenderness, and the tears rolling down his cheeks.

Darrell gently kissed his young kinsman's forehead, and, extricating himself from Lionel's clasp, paced the room, and spoke on while pacing vives to be taught reverence to my I said, 'Next year the wound will father's grave. My wedded life was be healed; I have time yet.' Now not happy: its record needs no age is near, the grave not far; now, words. Of two children born to if ever, I must fulfil the promise me, both are gone. My son went that cheered my father's deathbed. first. I had thrown my life's life Nor does that duty comprise all my into him-a boy of energy, of noble motives. If I would regain healthpromise. 'Twas for him I began to ful thought, manly action, for my build that baffled fabric- Sepulchri remaining years, I must feel that immemor.' For him I bought, acre one haunting memory is exorcised, on acre, all the land within reach of and for ever laid at rest. It can be Fawley-lands twelve miles distant. so only-whatever my risk of new I had meant to fill up the inter- cares - whatever the folly of the vening space—to buy out a mush- hazard at my age—be so only byroom earl whose woods and corn- by-" Once more Darrell paused, fields lie between. I was scheming fixed his eyes steadily on Lionel. the purchase - scrawling on the and, opening his arms, cried out, county man - when they brought "Forgive me, my noble Lionel, the news that the boy I had just that I am not contented with an taken back to school was dead- heir like you; and do not you mock drowned bathing on a calm summer at the old man who dreams that eve. No, Lionel. I must go on. woman may love him yet, and that That grief I have wrestled with- his own children may inherit his conquered. I was widowed then, father's home." A daughter still left-the first-born. whom my father had blest on his opened to him; and if Darrell had deathbed. I transferred all my love, planned how best to remove from all my hopes, to her. I had no vain the young man's mind for ever the preference for male heirs. Is a race possibility of one selfish pang, no less pure that runs on through the craft could have attained his object female line? Well, my son's death like that touching confidence before was merciful compared to—" which the disparities between youth Again Darrell stopped—again hur- and age literally vanished. And, ried on. "Enough! all is forgiven both made equal, both elevated in the grave! I was then still in alike, verily I know not which at the noon of man's life, free to form the moment felt the elder or the new ties. Another grief that I can-not tell you; it is not all conquered mingled in one emotion, are set vet. And by that grief the last free from all time save the present; verdure of existence was so blighted, par each with each, they meet as that—that—in short, I had no heart brothers twin-born. for nuptial altars - for the social not kept. No child of mine sur- world. Years went by. Each year

Lionel sprang to the breast that

